英文原文

Even before the shooting ended at Thammasat University, the airwaves began to echo the jubilance among the perpetrators of the massacre. The broadcast that day not only misinformed the public but also justified the atrocity, just as standard propaganda would. Perhaps unbeknownst to the perpetrators, it also established a narrative of the massacre, a collective memory that framed many individual ones and the public discourse of the massacre for years to come. Perhaps like the big bang theory of the universe, the initial moment was tremendously important because it was the beginning of memory and would have a lasting impact on the perpetrators and the public alike, regardless of its falsehood and unreason. The victims and their sympathizers and the opponents of the state belonged to communities of different collective memories that were suppressed after the incident. Their silence in the public sphere, however, did not mean that their memories had been wiped out. Rather, most of them found alternative spheres beyond the state’s control and surveillance, namely, the underground, the jungles, and within the limited spheres of families and friends. For the radicals, their bitter memories led them to embrace the Communist Party of Thailand (CPT)’s armed struggles against the government in Bangkok. But the radicals’ and CPT’s memories were not the only alternative. Many other victims found different communities of shared memories, and those who could not live on in silence. The post-massacre period provided the conditions for the beginnings of these memories.

法政大学的枪声甚至还未停止，广播里便已经回响着屠杀加害者的欢呼雀跃。当天的广播不仅向公众传播错误信息，也像典型的宣传一样，为暴行辩护。也许加害者自己尚未意识到，这些广播同时确立了一种关于屠杀的叙述，一种集体记忆；它将在此后多年里为许多个人记忆及有关屠杀的公共话语提供框架。也许正如宇宙大爆炸理论一样，最初的时刻极其重要，因为它是记忆的起点；无论其中有多少虚假和无理之处，它都将对加害者和公众产生持久影响。受害者、同情他们的人，以及国家的反对者，则属于另外一些拥有不同集体记忆的共同体；这些共同体在事件之后遭到压制。然而，他们在公共领域的沉默并不意味着记忆已被抹除。相反，大多数人找到了国家控制与监视之外的替代空间，即地下活动、丛林，以及家庭和朋友之间的有限空间。对于激进派而言，痛苦的记忆使他们投身泰国共产党（Communist Party of Thailand，CPT）反对曼谷政府的武装斗争。不过，激进派与泰国共产党的记忆并不是唯一的替代记忆。许多其他受害者也找到了不同的共同记忆群体，其中还有无法在沉默中继续生活的人们。屠杀后的时期为这些记忆的萌生提供了条件。

October 6 as the Victory over the Communists

将10月6日视为战胜共产主义者的胜利

On October 6, 1976, television and radio broadcasts in the country were mostly under army control. In Thailand, then and now, all airwaves belonged to the two main agencies of the state: about half of them to the Department of Public Relations (DPR) and the other half to the armed forces. Private operators get concessions or rent airtimes from them for commercial or similarly justifiable purposes. The DPR operated Radio Thailand and its branches in every region and province. It also owned the rights to two of the four television channels at the time. It set up a semigovernmental company to operate one channel and gave the concession to a private company to operate the other. The rest of the airwaves belonged to the military, allegedly for national security reasons. Then and now, the army owned one television broadcast, TV5, and gave the concession for the other to a private company. The various regiments, branches, and districts of the armed forces throughout the country own and operate particular bands of airwaves for commercial radio broadcasts. This military fiefdom has not changed, even in democratic periods, since the beginning of radio broadcasting in Thailand.

1976年10月6日，泰国的电视与广播大多受到军方控制。当时和现在一样，泰国所有广播频率都归国家两大机构所有：约一半属于公共关系厅（Department of Public Relations，DPR），另一半属于武装部队。私人经营者为了商业或其他被认为合理的目的，从这两个机构取得特许经营权或租用播出时段。公共关系厅经营泰国广播电台及其在各地区与各府的分支机构，也拥有当时四个电视频道中两个频道的权利。它成立一家半政府公司来经营其中一个频道，并把另一频道的经营权授予私人公司。剩余的广播频率则属于军方，据称是出于国家安全原因。当时和现在一样，陆军拥有一个电视台TV5，并把另一个频道的经营权授予私人公司。全国各地武装部队的不同军团、兵种与军区，拥有并经营特定频段，进行商业电台广播。自泰国开始无线电广播以来，这块军方的势力领地即使在民主时期也未改变。

英文原文

During the rise of the right-wing movement from mid-1975 to October 1976, these military broadcasts coordinated into a unified network under the command of then Lieutenant Colonel Uthan Sanidvongse, who was the broadcast master at the Armor Broadcast Services (Yan Kro). A unified network meant that every military broadcasting service in the country would relay the programs from Yan Kro, controlling literally half of the nation’s airwaves alleged to be critical to national security at any moment. The name Yan Kro thus became synonymous with the entire military network. The protest against Thanom’s return was one such critical moment. The unified broadcasts from Yan Kro went to work again, without which the massacre might not have happened. The army also used TV5 for propaganda. The entire country fell under the spell of its propaganda.

从1975年中期至1976年10月右翼运动兴起期间，这些军方广播在当时的乌坦·萨尼旺（Uthan Sanidvongse）中校指挥下，整合为一个统一网络。乌坦是装甲兵广播服务台（Armor Broadcast Services，Yan Kro）的广播负责人。所谓统一网络，是指全国各军方广播机构都转播Yan Kro的节目，从而实际上在任何时刻都控制着据称对国家安全至关重要的全国一半广播频率。因此，Yan Kro这个名字成为整个军方广播网络的代称。反对他侬（Thanom）回国的抗议正是这样一个关键时刻。Yan Kro的统一广播再次发挥作用；没有它，屠杀可能就不会发生。陆军还利用TV5进行宣传。整个国家都陷入了它的宣传魔力之中。

[P004]

英文原文

As the carnage at TU was unfolding, Yan Kro and TV5 worked in tandem, broadcasting live throughout the morning. Their main task was to justify the massacre on two related grounds: first, the mock hanging of the crown prince was extremely hurtful to the Thai people, hence the students must be punished; second, the student movement and the demonstration were part of a communist scheme to overthrow the monarchy and destroy the nation. The protesters at TU were called the rioters (phukokan chalachon), the deceived (phulongphit), the trouble makers (phukokhwam mai sa-ngop). They were Yuan, the broadcast repeated several times throughout those hours.1 “Yuan” is a Thai pejorative term for Vietnamese. In the anticommunist fever of the times, it was not merely a slang term for an ethnic Other, a non-Thai, but also a dehumanizing term for an enemy of Thai-ness.

中文译文

法政大学内的杀戮正在进行时，Yan Kro与TV5相互配合，整个上午进行现场直播。它们的主要任务是依据两个相互关联的理由为屠杀辩护：第一，模拟绞死王储的行为严重伤害了泰国人民的感情，因此学生必须受到惩罚；第二，学生运动和示威活动是共产主义者推翻君主制、摧毁国家的阴谋的一部分。法政大学的抗议者被称为“暴乱分子”（phukokan chalachon）、“受骗者”（phulongphit）和“滋事者”（phukokhwam mai sa-ngop）。广播还在那几个小时里反复称他们是“Yuan”。 “Yuan”是泰语中对越南人的贬称。在当时狂热的反共氛围里，它不仅是对非泰国族群他者的俗称，也是把泰国性（Thai-ness）的敌人非人化的用语。

[P005]

On TV5, the hosts provided comments, explanations, and excuses for the actions they saw on television. They repeatedly said that the shootings were from inside TU targeting the police and the crowd outside: “hundreds of police officers were injured and dead.” Students had to be stripped to distinguish them from the ordinary people who helped the police. The hosts commented many times on the size of the patriotic crowd, “hundreds of thousands” of people, both outside TU and at the Equestrian Plaza. They were voluntary, active, and willing to take risks to fight “the commies” inside TU. The hosts were overwhelmed, proud, and delighted by the popular support. They seemed to enjoy what they were seeing and doing, as when one quipped that those arrested could not speak Thai and thus must be Yuan; then they all laughed together. The nonsense about female students, that they “took off their own clothes out of fright—nobody ordered them to do so . . . they were not naked; they still have bras on,” was a kind of sexual jest among the all-male commentators.

中文译文

在TV5上，主持人对电视画面中的行动作出评论、解释并为之开脱。他们反复声称，枪击是从法政大学内部向警察和外面的人群发起的，并称“有数百名警察受伤和死亡”。他们解释说，必须脱去学生的衣服，以便把他们与帮助警察的普通民众区分开来。主持人多次评论爱国人群的规模，声称在法政大学外和皇家骑马像广场（Equestrian Plaza）都有“数十万人”。这些人都是自愿参加、积极行动、甘愿冒险，同法政大学里的“共产分子”作战。主持人为民众的支持感到激动、自豪和欣喜。他们似乎很享受正在观看和从事的事情。例如，有人打趣说，被捕者不会讲泰语，所以肯定是“Yuan”，随后大家一起大笑。对于女学生，他们胡说什么“她们自己吓得把衣服脱了——没有人命令她们这么做……她们并不是裸体；她们还穿着胸罩”，这成为一群男性评论员之间带有性意味的玩笑。

[P006]

At the end of the operation at TU, as the police corralled the students onto the buses that would take them to prison, the television hosts were in a jolly, celebratory mood. They boasted how great their mass supporters were. Some of whom, according to the broadcast hosts, had asked for arms and explosives to spearhead the raid into TU while the police were waiting for the order at the beginning of the carnage. On the other hand, the hosts and their guests, the first six policemen who had led the crowd into TU a few hours earlier, made fun of those arrested and of the victims of torture and hanging. At one point, their conversation became a sarcastic joke.

法政大学的行动结束时，警察把学生赶上即将载他们去监狱的巴士，电视主持人则处于欢快的庆祝情绪中。他们夸耀自己广大支持者的杰出表现。据主持人说，其中一些人在杀戮开始时，警察尚在等待命令，就曾要求得到武器和爆炸物，准备带头冲进法政大学。另一方面，主持人和嘉宾——几个小时前率领人群进入法政大学的前六名警察——又嘲笑被捕者以及遭到酷刑、被吊死的受害者。有一次，他们的交谈变成了讽刺性的笑话。

Around 10:30 a.m., the DPR televised the massacre briefly with a different view on its channel. Its news editor, Sanphasiri Wirayasiri, a legendary pioneer of Thailand’s television, could not stand the military’s propaganda. He singlehandedly filmed and reported the brutality as it unfolded. The DPR broadcast was taken off the air shortly after. That evening, the coup regime issued an order, announced nationally, to sack Sanphasiri from the DPR and the company that operated the television.2 Other than this one rebellious act, information about the incident at TU was almost completely under army control. Its view turned into the dominant narrative of the event. Even the government folded into the right wing’s narrative, as reflected in its official statement and Seni’s press conference that afternoon.

大约上午10时30分，公共关系厅在自己的频道上短暂播出了关于屠杀的另一种观点。该厅新闻编辑、泰国电视事业的传奇先驱桑帕西里·维拉亚西里（Sanphasiri Wirayasiri）无法忍受军方的宣传。他独自一人拍摄并报道了正在发生的残暴行为。不久之后，公共关系厅的广播便被切断。当晚，政变政权发布一项全国公告的命令，解雇桑帕西里在公共关系厅及经营电视业务的公司中的职务。　　除了这一次反抗行为，法政大学事件的信息几乎完全受到军方控制。军方的观点成为对事件的主导叙述。就连政府也倒向了右翼叙事，这一点反映在当天下午政府的正式声明和社尼（Seni）的新闻发布会上。

One of the earliest orders of the National Administrative Reform Council, the military junta that seized power that evening, was to shut down all daily newspapers and to censor every magazine and news publication before it went to print. Some dailies closed only for a few days, but many did so indefinitely.3 The tight media control remained in place for more than a year. Except for the October 6 afternoon prints of a few dailies, the published information, explanations, and excuses followed the state's narrative of the incident. In fact, the censorship was not officially lifted for some years and the massacre remained one of the most sensitive items for the authorities for many more years. In 1979, for the first time in Thailand, the news magazine Lok Mai (New World) published a few horrific photos of the massacre. It was swiftly shut down and the printed copies taken off the market.4 People in Thailand heard but only vaguely about the massacre.

当天晚上夺取政权的军事集团——国家行政改革委员会（National Administrative Reform Council）——最早发布的命令之一，是关闭所有日报，并要求每份杂志和新闻出版物在印刷之前接受审查。有些日报只停刊几天，许多则无限期停刊。　严格的媒体控制持续了一年多。除了少数日报10月6日下午版以外，公开发表的信息、解释和辩解都遵循国家对事件的叙述。事实上，审查制度在此后数年内都未被正式解除，屠杀在此后更长的时间里仍是当局最敏感的话题之一。1979年，新闻杂志《新世界》（Lok Mai）首次在泰国刊登了一些关于屠杀的恐怖照片，杂志随即遭到关闭，已经印出的刊物也被撤下市场。　泰国人民虽然听说过这场屠杀，却只得到模糊的印象。

Nevertheless, no control was complete or total. On that day, foreign journalists and photographers took the risk to inform the world of the carnage in Bangkok, despite the scary situation that almost took the life of a United Press International journalist. Neal Ulevich, an Associated Press journalist and photographer, managed to wire a dozen photos to the Tokyo office, then to the world. Given the technology at the time, which was slow and available only at the government's Central Post Office, the authorities might have found out and intervened at any time.5 Fortunately for these foreign journalists, authorities did not pay as close attention to them during the chaos as to Thai journalists. For some years, apart from word of mouth, these foreign sources of photos and reports were circulated illegally within small circles such as university campuses as alternative information about the massacre.

然而，任何控制都不可能完全彻底。当天，外国记者和摄影师冒着危险将曼谷杀戮的情况传达给世界，尽管局势十分可怕，甚至几乎夺去一名合众国际社记者的生命。美联社记者兼摄影师尼尔·乌勒维奇（Neal Ulevich）设法将十余张照片通过电报传到东京办公室，再传向全世界。考虑到当时技术传输缓慢，而且只有政府中央邮局才具备相关设备，当局随时可能发现并加以阻止。

幸运的是，在混乱中，当局对这些外国记者的关注没有对泰国记者那么密切。此后数年，除了

口耳相传，这些来自外国的照片和报道还在大学校园等小圈子中秘密流通，成为关于屠杀的替代信息来源。

英文原文

The first announcement of the coup group on October 6 in the evening reinforced Yan Kro's narrative of the incident, that is, that the protest was a communist plot, in cooperation with communist Vietnam, to destroy the nation and the monarchy. The authority's actions, which were never described clearly, were necessary to restore law and order. This political and overwrought account was the first narrative of the massacre to reach the public sphere; it was also the only one allowed for some time. Soon after the incident, the coup group organized a concerted propaganda campaign—a small booklet, a film, and an exhibition about the incident at TU.6 The propaganda emphasized that the violence committed by the radicals against ordinary patriots and the police on that day showed evidence that the students were communists, such as the flag and symbol of the People's Republic of China and leftist publications that proliferated from 1973 to 1976, and displayed numerous heavy weapons allegedly found at TU as proof of the planned insurrection. Fortunately, it suggests, the radicals were defeated by those hundreds of thousands of patriots outside TU and at the Equestrian Plaza that day. The propaganda also asserted that the Seni government had been weak and indecisive in dealing with the communists, hence the necessity for the coup, "which had not been planned beforehand," but was needed to prevent further bloodshed and the destruction of the country.7 The coup government also sent the right-wing demagogue, Samak Sundaravej, on a world tour to provide the world with the state's version of the massacre.8 For many months, daily newspapers followed this narrative, castigating the students as villains, the ousted government and many professors as their enablers, and so on. Meanwhile, another dictator in exile since 1973, Prapat Jarusathian, returned home to a warm welcome in January 1977. In an ostentatious press conference, he condemned the student movement as having been communist since 1973, when it led the uprising against his regime.9 Thanom left the monkhood the same month and demanded the return of all his assets confiscated after the 1973 uprising.10

中文译文

推翻的政府和许多教授说成纵容学生的人，等等。与此同时，自1973年以来流亡海外的另一名独裁者普拉帕·乍鲁沙天（Prapat Jarusathian）于1977年1月回国，并受到热烈欢迎。在一场铺张的新闻发布会上，他谴责学生运动自1973年领导起义反对他的政权时起，就是共产主义运动。同月，他依还俗，并要求归还在1973年起义后遭没收的全部资产。

The Right-Wing Collective Memory

[P016]

Despite its distortions and falsehoods, the military's narrative was the first collective memory of the incident and would frame individual experiences and memories. Evidence of the effects of this emblematic memory are the testimonies of the witnesses to the police in November and December 1976, part of the preparation for the charges against the ringleaders in the October 6 trial.11 Among the 244 witnesses were seventy-two police officers, eighteen military officers, forty-six faculty, staff, and security guards at TU, fifteen faculty and staff from other universities, fourteen journalists and media photographers, two alleged leftists who turned against the leftists, and about thirty people from various right-wing organizations. Among the most prominent names were Seni the ousted elected prime minister and Uthan the broadcast master of Yan Kro. Some of them were expert witnesses, such as weapons experts from the military, medical examiners who performed the autopsies, managers of the banks that had the NSCT accounts, and so on. The majority, including fifteen TU professors known for their right-wing views, members of right-wing-groups and labor unions, and a majority of the police officers, especially those from the Special Branch (Santiban), or political police, all testified against the students. Eventually, the prosecutor chose eighty-two of the 244 to be the prosecuting witnesses in the October 6 trial in 1977 and 1978.12

尽管充满扭曲和谎言，军方叙述仍然是关于事件的第一种集体记忆，并将为个人经验与记忆提供框架。这种象征性记忆发挥影响的证据，来自1976年11月和12月见证者向警方提供的证词；这些证词是为10月6日审判中指控所谓头目作准备的一部分。 在244名证人中，有72名警察、18名军官、46名法政大学教职员工与保安、15名其他大学教职员工、14名记者和媒体摄影师、两名据称后来转而反对左翼的左翼人士，以及约30名来自各类右翼组织的人员。最著名的人物包括被推翻的民选总理社尼，以及Yan Kro广播负责人乌坦。其中一些是专家证人，如军方武器专家、实施尸检的法医、管理全国学生中心（NSCT）账户的银行经理等等。多数证人，包括15名以右翼观点著称的法政大学教授、右翼团体和工会成员，以及多数警察（尤其是政治警察特别支部Santiban的警员），都作了不利于学生的证词。最后，检方从244人中选出82人，作为1977年至1978年10月6日审判的控方证人。

Let us take for granted that these witnesses had individual memories of the massacre, each with different experiences at various spots and moments during that morning. By the time they talked to the police in November and December that year, their accounts showed the influences of the right-wing collective memory. For example, several mentioned encounters with protesters who did not speak Thai, implicitly or explicitly offering testimonies that fit the narrative of the Vietnamese or communist plot.13 Apart from police officers, many also testified that they saw or heard gunfire from inside TU—that is, by students—toward the police, one claiming to have witnessed heavy casualties among the police and the right-wing crowd because of "the powerful fire power of the students."14 One went as far as to claim not to have seen or heard the police shooting, but to have witnessed shooting and brutality by students.15 In contrast, many heard shooting in both directions, or were confused as to who did the shooting, and only one dared to say the shooting was primarily from the outside.16

不妨假定这些证人各自对屠杀都有个人记忆，而且在那天早晨的不同地点和时刻有着不同经历。然而，当他们在当年11月和12月向警察讲述时，其叙述已经显示出右翼集体记忆的影响。例如，一些人提到遇见不会说泰语的抗议者，以直接或间接方式提供符合越南人或共产主义者阴谋叙述的证词。　　除警察外，许多人也声称看到或听到从法政大学内部——也就是学生方面——向警察开火，一人声称曾看到警察和右翼人群因"学生强大的火力"而伤亡惨重。　　还有人甚至声称既未看到也未听到警察射击，却见证了学生的枪击与暴行。　　相比之下，许多人听到双方都有枪声，或者无法判断是谁在开枪；只有一人敢说枪击主要来自校园外部。

Some of the strongest testimony against the communists came not from the goons or the police but from the right-wing professors. Some claimed to have recognized on the spot that the skit portrayed the mock hanging of the crown prince, rather than later from the photo.17 They offered the police the names of the alleged communist professors and students along with damaging information about them.18 Some provided materials they had collected to help the police prepare their case.19 They described their opponents in a coarse and ugly fashion, and some information was blatantly false and outrageous. The testimony against Dr. Puey Ungphakorn (figure 4), the liberal TU rector who sympathized with the students, is a case in point. The right-wing professors told the police that Puey raised funds to help students stockpile weapons, that he and some others were behind the labor strikes. One even testified that Puey once said that a left-wing labor leader "was a son to [Puey's vice-rector] who was my son, therefore [the labor leader] was my grandson."20 Another said that anyone who opposed Nawaphon must be Yuan. One said that it was good that the October 6 incident had occurred because it had stopped the communists and restored peace to the country.21 They signed their names to all these statements. Given the overwhelming anticommunist fever of the times, the language and rhetoric in which they expressed their views and false information were probably fairly typical.

一些最强烈的反共证词，并非出自暴徒或警察，而是右翼教授。有些人声称当场就认出学生戏剧是在模拟绞死王储，而不是后来才从照片中得知。　　他们向警方提供所谓共产主义教授与学生的姓名，以及损害这些人名誉的材料。　　一些人还交出自己收集的资料，帮助警方准备案件。

他们用粗俗丑陋的语言描述对手，部分信息显然虚假而荒唐。针对同情学生的法政大学自由派校长贝·翁帕功博士（Puey Ungphakorn，图4）的证词，就是一个例子。右翼教授告诉警方，贝筹集资金帮助学生囤积武器，他和其他几人还在幕后操纵劳工罢工。甚至有人作证说，贝曾表示一位左翼工会领导人“是［贝的副校长］的儿子，而副校长是我的儿子，所以［这位工会领导人］是我的孙子”。　　另有人声称，凡是反对“新力量”（Nawaphon）的人都是Yuan。有一人说，10月6日事件的发生是好事，因为它制止了共产主义者，使国家恢复和平。　　他们在所有这些陈述上都签了自己的名字。考虑到当时压倒性的反共狂热，他们表达观点和虚假信息的语言与修辞，很可能相当典型。

Witness no. 141 probably epitomized the nearly complete blending of individual memory and the collective narrative of the right wing in those days. She was a food provider at a canteen in TU that was close to the river but some distance from Sanamluang and the soccer field. Despite that, she claimed to be able to move around the campus rather freely and that she had witnessed several actions around the campus that morning, including the ones that occurred near Sanamluang. She testified that she heard the police tell people to leave the campus, but “a guy in long hair like a Hippy stayed at the gate to attack, kick, beat people who wanted to leave,” that she saw a protester who tried to escape get shot in the water by students, that she wanted to get out too but was blocked by students. She saw students fire at the police who waved a white flag trying to negotiate a ceasefire, but did not see the police fire any shots. The students’ security staff then ordered her and other people at the canteen to move into a room on the upper floor. They took the valuables from people, including 18,000 baht in cash from her. When she refused, they slapped her in the face and injured her left eye. She saw a number of students take three boxes full of hand grenades, six to seven handguns, and bags full of documents to hide them near her food stand.

第141号证人的证词，或许最能体现当年个人记忆与右翼集体叙述几乎完全融合的情况。她是法政大学一间食堂的食品供应者，食堂靠近河边，与皇家田广场（Sanamluang）和足球场有一定距离。尽管如此，她声称自己可以相当自由地在校园各处走动，并亲眼看见那天早晨校园多处发生的事情，包括皇家田广场附近的事件。她作证说，她听见警察叫人们离开校园，但“一名留着嬉皮士式长发的男子守在门口，攻击、踢打想要离开的人”；她看到一名试图逃跑的抗议者在水中被学生开枪射中；她自己也想出去，却遭学生阻拦。她看到学生向挥白旗试图谈判停火的警察开火，却没看到警察开过枪。随后，学生保安人员命令她和食堂里的其他人上楼进入一个房间。他们拿走人们的贵重物品，其中包括她的18,000泰铢现金。她拒绝时，他们扇了她耳光，伤了她的左眼。她还看到几名学生带着装满手榴弹的三个箱子、六七把手枪，以及装满文件的袋子，把它们藏在她的食品摊位附近。

The testimony of witness no. 141, however, was undercut by witness no. 142, another food provider who was with no. 141 most of the time. Witness no. 142's testimony was a far more plausible account of the same happenings, without embellishments from the right-wing collective narrative. Simply, she tried to get out via one gate but met students who said she should not do so because they could not guarantee her safety. She then returned to the food stand without venturing anywhere else, let alone near Sanamluang on the other side of campus. Given the sound of heavy fire from the soccer field, she and others hid in a room upstairs. She saw two students hide weapons, and they threatened her not to tell anyone. She identified the same student as witness no.141 did.22 That was all. No announcement by police. She witnessed no one killed by students in the water or anywhere else. She did not witness the shooting of police with a white flag who tried to negotiate with students. This action was told by a police officer via Yan Kro that morning and reported by a few dailies subsequently. If it was true, it took place near Sanamluang.23 It was likely that witness no. 141 picked up the heroic story of the police later and incorporated it into her memories as well. The shooting, killing, and brutality by students with heavy weapons such as boxes of grenades could have been added to make it fit the collective memory during the months after the massacre.

然而，第141号证人的证词，被第142号证人——另一名大部分时间与第141号证人在一起的食品供应者——所削弱。第142号证人讲述了同样的事件，但她的版本可信得多，也没有右翼集体叙述所附加的夸张情节。简单地说，她试图从一扇门离开，却遇到一些学生，学生告诉她不该出去，因为他们无法保证她的安全。于是她回到食品摊位，没有再去其他地方，更不用说校园另一边的皇家田广场附近。听到足球场传来的猛烈枪声，她和其他人躲进了楼上的房间。她看见两名学生藏匿武器，学生威胁她不要告诉任何人。她认出了与第141号证人相同的那名学生。 仅此而已。没有警察发布离校公告。她没有目睹任何人在水中或其他地方被学生杀害，也没有看见学生向挥着白旗、试图与他们谈判的警察开枪。后一个故事是当天上午一名警察通过Yan Kro讲述、随后被几份日报报道的。如果属实，那件事发生的地点应该靠近皇家田广场。 很可能第141号证人后来听到了关于警察英雄行为的故事，并把它吸收到自己的记忆中。关于学生使用装满手榴弹的箱子等重型武器进行枪击、杀戮和施暴的情节，也可能是在屠杀后的几个月里被加入证词，以使其符合集体记忆。

Similar suspicious additions also appeared in the purported eyewitness accounts, for example, of witnesses nos. 109, 219, and 220, whom I met and interviewed in the 2000s. Only witness no. 219 could recall a few of the actions he had claimed to witness, far fewer than those in his sworn statement. Witness no. 220 confirmed that he had witnessed one hanging but insisted that he did not see much else because he was mostly at the fringe of the action. Witness no. 109 repeatedly insisted that he had observed the scene from afar and did not witness any actual event. Both 109 and 220 denied that they ever gave testimony to the police afterward. Perhaps such an ugly episode is not worth remembering. Perhaps they were truly on the fringe. Their individual memories were affected by what they learned from the media and the state's propaganda in the days that followed. They made their own memories fit the collective one to enhance their esteem as active participants in a historic event. Thus the collective memory was not a compilation of individual ones. Instead, it was a template through which individual memories could be remembered and communicated. If it were otherwise, memories that contradicted the conventional account would be deemed too idiosyncratic and negligible to be believed.

类似的可疑增添也出现在其他所谓目击者的叙述中，例如第109、219和220号证人；我曾在21世纪初与他们见面并访谈。只有第219号证人还能回忆起自己曾声称目睹的少数行为，远少于他宣誓证词中提到的内容。第220号证人确认自己见到过一起绞刑，但坚持说自己没有看见太多别的事情，因为他大多处于行动边缘。第109号证人反复强调自己是从远处观察现场，未亲眼见证任何实际事件。109和220号都否认自己事后曾向警方作证。也许这样丑陋的一幕不值得记住；也许他们的确处于现场边缘。他们的个人记忆受到事件后从媒体和国家宣传中获知的信息的影响。为了提高自己作为历史事件积极参与者的声望，他们使自己的记忆符合集体记忆。因此，集体记忆不是个人记忆的汇编，而是个人记忆据以被回想和传达的模板。否则，那些与通行说法矛盾的记忆，就会被视为过于特殊、微不足道，因而不值得相信。

The victims, their sympathizers, and the critics of the state naturally did not subscribe to the right-wing narrative and collective memory of the massacre. To them, October 6 could not be viewed as anything but a brutal crime by the Thai state. It was the day that, as the writer Wat Wanlayangkul put it, "the Wolf devoured the Lambs."24 Under the repressive conditions after the massacre, how could they cope with their memories of the event? How could they deal with the anticommunist environment from which their memories dissented? Was there an alternative collective memory in which they could take refuge? How could the dissenting memories survive individually? The radicals, their sympathizers, other victims including the relatives of the dead, found their different ways to mourn and to remember, from joining the communists to living on with their isolated memories. The conditions of the post-massacre era also marked the beginning of these dissenting memories, which lasted for decades to come.

受害者、同情他们的人以及批评国家的人，自然不会接受右翼有关屠杀的叙述和集体记忆。对他们来说，10月6日只能是泰国国家犯下的一桩残酷罪行。正如作家瓦·万拉扬坤（Wat Wanlayangkul）所说，那一天“狼吞噬了羔羊”。 在屠杀后的压制环境中，他们该如何应对自己对这件事的记忆？他们又该如何面对与自身记忆相矛盾的反共环境？是否存在另一种集体记忆，能让他们获得庇护？那些与官方不一致的记忆，又如何在个人层面存活下来？激进派、他们的同情者、其他受害者，包括死者亲属，找到了各自不同的哀悼与记忆方式，从加入共产党到带着孤立的个人记忆继续生活。屠杀后的时代条件，也标志着这些异议记忆的开始；它们将在此后持续数十年。

The reign of terror continued after the killing that morning. More radical students who were not at TU that night were arrested afterward, mostly at home. The police interrogated many families and searched many homes afterward, even the ones of those who died.25 Most universities were closed for a few weeks and TU was closed for a month and a half.26 Left-leaning publications were considered communist, and in that atmosphere the notion of the “left” expanded to include most liberal political and critical publications and even academic textbooks. In thousands of households around the country, people destroyed or burned their books. Sulak Sivaraksa, a prominent social critic who owned a book store, estimated that about a hundred thousand books were destroyed at his store and warehouse alone.27 Even a nonradical victim, such as Sanphasiri, who broadcast the brutality, suffered from the massacre simply because of his professionalism, becoming persona non grata and went bankrupt trying to defend himself from false charges. He even considered committing suicide.28

那天早晨的杀戮结束后，恐怖统治仍然继续。更多当晚没有在法政大学的激进派学生随后被捕，多数是在家中遭到逮捕。警方之后审讯了许多家庭，搜查了许多住宅，甚至包括死者的家。多数大学关闭了数周，法政大学关闭了一个半月。倾向左翼的出版物被视为共产主义刊物；在这种氛围中，“左翼”的概念扩展到大多数自由主义政治出版物、批判性出版物，甚至学术教科书。全国成千上万的家庭毁掉或烧掉了自己的书籍。著名社会批评家、书店经营者苏拉·西瓦拉萨（Sulak Sivaraksa）估计，仅他自己的书店与仓库就有约十万册书被毁。 即使像桑帕西里这样并非激进派的受害者，也仅仅因为恪守职业操守、播出了暴行的画面，而遭到屠杀事件的牵连。他成了不受欢迎的人，为了应对虚假的指控而破产，甚至考虑过自杀。

A few days after the initial interrogation, the police searched my home as well. They brought me home in disguise, allegedly to protect me from the angry crowd who might recognize and attack me. Given that Ngao and I were in prison as ringleaders, my siblings were sent away from home to stay with various relatives for months after the massacre. This was typical for many, perhaps most, families of college activists, whether radical or not. Those parents were trying to shield their children not only from the police but also from their royalist neighbors. The anticommunist hysteria provided fertile ground for the proliferation of vigilantism. Like many others, my parents became targets of insults from neighbors for raising communists: college activists had become communist suspects.29

For the radical youths who were the direct targets of the suppression, the massacre was a critical turning point. Their stories, one after another, repeat almost the same sentiments—extreme grief and fear. The brutal killings and the loss of their friends were indescribably shocking to them. Feeling threatened, being followed or watched by the authorities, they were afraid of meeting one another even on campus, let alone outside it. Fear spread to all. Unsurprisingly, many felt vengeful. How could they return to school again or live a normal life in a situation that was so severely repressive, where they were considered enemies of the nation? To thousands of these radicals, the massacre proved that the CPT was correct—that the ruling class, the Thai state, the imperialists, the feudalists, the capitalists, and the junta were so brutal that they would kill people who fought for democracy and for a better society, and that peaceful struggle within urban areas had limitations. Armed struggle in the countryside, as advocated by the Maoist CPT was, they felt, definitely the correct alternative.30

对于直接成为镇压目标的激进青年而言，屠杀是一个关键转折点。他们的故事一个接着一个，反复表达几乎相同的感受——极度悲伤与恐惧。残暴的杀戮和朋友的失去，让他们震惊到无法言说。他们感到受到威胁，被当局跟踪或监视，甚至害怕在校园里见到彼此，更不用说在校园外面。恐惧蔓延到所有人。毫不奇怪，许多人萌生复仇念头。在如此严厉的压制环境中，他们被视为国家的敌人，又怎能重新回到学校，或者过正常生活？对成千上万的激进派而言，屠杀证明了泰国共产党是正确的：统治阶级、泰国国家、帝国主义者、封建主义者、资本家和军政府是如此残暴，竟会杀害那些为民主和更好的社会而奋斗的人；城市中的和平斗争也确实有其局限。他们认为，毛主义的泰国共产党所主张的乡村武装斗争，无疑是正确的替代选择。

英文原文

For a few years before the massacre, the CPT had gained influence over the student movement from top to bottom. The extent of influence and domination of the CPT—whether it could actually direct the decision-making process of the student movement or could only influence their thinking—remains debatable.31 It is fair to say, however, that the CPT's armed struggle and its rationale was known among the young radicals. In the post-massacre condition, it was not difficult for the CPT to assert itself as an option for them. Only one day after the massacre, on October 7, while three thousand were still in jail and many thousands more were in shock, the CPT issued a statement condemning the Thai state for its crime on October 6. It stated forcefully that armed struggle was the only viable option to combat the barbarous state, and that the CPT was in solidarity with the victims.

英文原文

In the weeks and months after the bloodshed, the Voice of People of Thailand, the official broadcast of the CPT, pounded that message daily, including in an important CPT statement on December 1, 1976, the thirty-fourth anniversary of its founding.36 The CPT called October 6 the "bloodshed incident" (korani nongluat), using adjectives such as barbaric (pa thuan), cruel (hot rai), torturous (tharun), and the like. They called the dead victims "the martyrs" (wirachon) who sacrificed for the struggle for independence from US imperialism for democracy and a just society. In the CPT's discourse of the massacre, vengeance by arms was explicit and justified. This became a collective memory, a powerful alternative to that of the state.

Despite their youthful age, the radicals faced a decision that would affect the rest of their lives. They were young men and women in their late teens and early twenties with hopeful futures. Most had never thought about making such a momentous decision before. Many recall the moment with similar sentiments—grief, fear, vengefulness, and reluctance to make such a life-changing decision under extreme pressure. Those who decided to go to the jungle were not necessarily committed communists who subscribed to Maoism. In addition to the belief that the CPT would provide a refuge for their radical idealism, the strong drive that led them to embrace the CPT was fear for their lives, revenge for their friends, and their need for a space where they could “cry and condemn the murderous madness as much as I want to.”37 They sought a community where they could embrace their memories of the October 6 massacre.

More than a year after the massacre, it was estimated that two to three thousand students had joined the CPT. Not only was the number quite high, but these young men and women were also the intellectual cream of a generation.39 Thikan is probably correct in saying that "The group that benefited most from the political conditions under Thanin Kraivixian [the post-massacre period] was the Communist Party of Thailand."40 Had the CPT won the war and Thailand turned socialist, the radicals' memory would have become the dominant collective memory of the massacre; the victims, the national martyrs, and the revenge of the young radicals would have been complete. But that did not happen.

Certainly, many young radicals did not join the CPT in the jungle for various reasons such as family, health, and so on. Many of them stayed to carry on the underground operation in urban areas after the massacre. Equally significant were the many student activists and the sympathizing public who did not even consider the jungles or the armed struggle an option because they did not subscribe to the CPT's ideology or methods.41 They supported various radical causes, but their politics and activism were that of progressive liberal youth in the context of conservative Thai society, no more and no less. Nonetheless, they were in a movement that was undeniably under the strong influence, even ideological hegemony, of the CPT, which provided these disgruntled youths with the Maoist ideology and discourse to comprehend and articulate their views and idealism. Their turn to radicalism during those years was the result of a conjunction of factors that did not last long. These youths were as leftist as anyone in their late teens and early twenties can be, that is, they turned left fast but probably not deeply. They were “outsized” radicals, so to speak.42

当然，许多年轻激进派由于家庭、健康等各种原因，没有前往丛林加入泰国共产党。屠杀后，他们之中有许多人留下来，继续在城市从事地下活动。同样重要的是，许多学生活动分子和同情他们的公众，从来没有把前往丛林或武装斗争当成一个选择，因为他们并不认同泰国共产党的意识形态或方法。　　他们支持各种激进事业，但放在保守的泰国社会环境中看，他们的政治立场和行动主义就是进步自由派青年的政治立场和行动主义，不多也不少。不过，他们置身的运动不可否认地受到泰国共产党的强烈影响，甚至意识形态霸权的支配；共产党为这些不满现状的青年提供了毛主义意识形态和话语，使他们能够理解并表达自己的观点和理想。那几年里他们转向激进主义，是多种因素短暂汇合的结果。这些青年向左的程度，正如十几岁末到二十出头的人可能达到的程度：转得很快，却可能并不深入。可以说，他们是“被放大了的”激进派。

[P044]

The young radical movement was in fact ideologically diverse.43 People of many other ideologies and convictions were influenced by the CPT’s Maoism to various degrees. In the highly conservative context of Thailand, the liberal left and the committed Maoists were mixed. The movement was a refuge even for some radical conservatives, who were discontented with Thailand under the influence of the decadent American and Western culture, but who, given their young age, could not articulate their views on their own terms and therefore channeled their dissatisfaction by taking refuge under the Maoist umbrella. After all, the CPT’s Maoism was also culturally conservative in many respects, such as anti-West nationalism and patriarchal heterosexism. Individuals in the movement were not invariably committed Maoists.

年轻人的激进运动在意识形态上其实相当多样。　　持有各种其他意识形态和信念的人，都在不同程度上受到泰国共产党毛主义的影响。在泰国高度保守的环境中，自由派左翼与坚定的毛主义者混杂在一起。这个运动甚至成为某些激进保守派的庇护所。他们对颓败的美国和西方文化影响下的泰国不满，却因年纪太轻，无法用自己的语言表达观点，于是借助毛主义的保护伞来疏导不满。毕竟，泰国共产党的毛主义在许多方面也具有文化保守性，例如反西方的民族主义，以及父权制的异性恋性别观。运动中的个人并不都是坚定的毛主义者。

The view of the massacre held by nonradicals differed from both the state’s narrative and the CPT’s. Their collective memory was similar to the CPT’s to some extent in the characterization of the incident as brutal killings. But it differed fundamentally in regard to the desire for revenge and the attitude toward armed struggle as a viable alternative. The nonradical collective memory was not as prominent, though it is not difficult to find either. For example, the memoir of a TU student describes her extreme fear and grief over the massacre: “I wish I could close my eyes and ignore the world," and the sad, scary, and grim atmosphere at TU under the control of the armed police for months after it reopened. She was with her close friend when he contemplated going to the jungle. She writes, "I understood what he meant, although I wished he would stay here with friends. . . . I told myself that I understand [her friend] but. . . . I was too weak and too young." She knew where they went and what they chose to do, "even though such action remains a mystery to me." "The communists," she writes, "are my dear friends, my respected professors, and many good people around me." She then describes at length many political activities in the post-massacre period that she decided to join in order to help revive the student's political activism.44

非激进派对屠杀的看法，既不同于国家的叙述，也不同于泰国共产党的叙述。就把事件描述为残暴杀戮而言，他们的集体记忆在某种程度上与共产党相似；但在是否渴望复仇、是否把武装斗争视为可行替代道路上，二者有着根本区别。非激进派的集体记忆并不那么突出，但也并不难找到。例如，一位法政大学女学生的回忆录描写了她对屠杀极度的恐惧与悲伤："我真希望能闭上眼睛，无视这个世界。"她还描述了学校重新开放后几个月里，在武装警察控制下悲伤、恐怖、阴沉的校园氛围。当一位亲密的朋友考虑前往丛林时，她和他在一起。她写道："我理解他的意思，尽管我希望他和朋友们留在这里。……我告诉自己，我理解［那位朋友］，但是……我太软弱、太年轻了。"她知道那些人去了哪里，选择做什么，"尽管他们的行动对我而言仍是个谜"。她写道："所谓'共产主义者'，是我亲爱的朋友、我尊敬的教授，以及身边许多善良的人。"接着，她详细描述了屠杀后自己决定参与的许多政治活动，目的是帮助恢复学生的政治行动。

Among the radicals during the 1973 to 1976 period were the relatively influential Buddhists, who never subscribed to Maoism or the idea of armed struggle, but who advocated for radical spiritual changes including nonviolence. Loosely speaking, Thailand's radical Buddhist movement has been identified with a famous Buddhist social critic and writer-publisher, Sulak Sivaraksa. His ideas and social activism are the subject of several studies.45 He has been influential among young activists from the late 1960s to the present day. Many radical leftists of the mid-1970s, including me, were initially politicized under Sulak's influence before turning left. Many remain committed and active in Buddhist clubs in universities and in civic groups for various social justice causes. They agreed with the leftists on the broad agenda for political and social changes for the poor and the oppressed, but disagreed on what actions to take.46 In 1976, they were active in the protest against Thanom's return. Clearly, their memory of that morning was different from that of the leftist radicals. I discuss their view at length in chapter 7, regarding the Buddhist approach to the atrocity.

1973年至1976年的激进派中，还有一群影响力相对较大的佛教徒。他们从不认同毛主义或武装斗争的想法，而是主张包括非暴力在内的激进精神变革。大体而言，泰国激进佛教运动常与著名佛教社会批评家、作家兼出版人苏拉·西瓦拉萨联系在一起。关于他的思想和社会行动已有若干研究。　　从20世纪60年代末直到今天，他始终影响着年轻的活动分子。70年代中期许多激进左翼

人士，包括我自己，最初都受到苏拉影响而开始关心政治，此后才转向左翼。许多人仍然坚定地活跃在大学佛教社团以及推动各种社会正义事业的公民团体中。他们赞同左翼人士为穷人和受压迫者推动政治社会变革的总体目标，但在采取何种行动上存在分歧。 1976年，他们积极参加反对他侬回国的抗议。显然，他们对那个早晨的记忆不同于左翼激进派。我将在第七章详细讨论他们关于暴行的佛教式理解。

Beyond the radical students, the professional intellectuals—academics, journalists and publishers—were most affected by the massacre because they were also active participants and beneficiaries of the intellectual bloom between 1973 and 1976. The left-leaning liberal newspapers and news magazines, namely, Prachathippatai, Prachachat, and Chatturat, were shut down indefinitely on October 6. Hundreds of books, including several academic texts, were banned. Some academics and journalists were arrested, hunted down, interrogated, and publicly denounced as communists. Some who were active and prominent in the radical movement and who were part of the CPT's network before the massacre thus faced the same fate as radical students and also went to join the CPT in the jungle. Most, however, were neither part of the CPT's network nor subscribers to its ideology. Quite a number of them went into exile during the repressive year after the massacre. A few never returned. Unarguably, the best-known case was that of Puey, the rector of TU mentioned earlier. Although his actual experience on October 6 was unique, it is representative of the views and memories of the October 6 massacre among intellectuals.

除激进派学生外，专业知识分子——学者、记者与出版人——受到屠杀的影响最大，因为他们也是1973年至1976年知识界繁荣的积极参与者与受益者。倾向左翼的自由派报纸与新闻杂志，包括《民主》（Prachathippatai）、《人民》（Prachachat）和《十字路口》（Chatturat），于10月6日无限期停刊。数百种书籍，包括若干学术著作，遭到禁售。一些学者和记者被逮捕、追捕、审讯，并公开被斥为共产主义者。部分在激进运动中活跃而知名、屠杀前就属于泰国共产党网络的人，因此遭遇与激进派学生相同的命运，也去丛林加入共产党。不过，大多数人既不属于共产党的网络，也不认同其意识形态。相当一部分人在屠杀后一年的压制时期流亡海外，少数人再也没有回来。最著名的无疑是前文提到的法政大学校长贝·翁帕功。虽然他在10月6日的实际经历独一无二，但他的看法仍能代表知识分子群体对于屠杀的观点与记忆。

As a former governor of the Bank of Thailand and a technocrat, Puey was widely and highly respected for his integrity. As an academic, he was known for his center-left views in a conservative country dominated by the military and the royalists. After the popular uprising in 1973, he was in 1974 the first rector of TU elected by faculty and students. During those tumultuous years, TU became known as the center of radical activism—hosting public forums, leftist publications, protests and demonstrations, even sheltering protesting peasants and workers. In fact, Puey faced tremendous pressure both from the radical students who treated him as part of the establishment, and the political right wing, who believed that he was a communist and a mastermind of the radical movement. This was the genesis of the nonsensical but widespread rumors that, for example, TU had stockpiled heavy weapons or built a tunnel underneath the river in preparation for a communist insurrection. He had been a target of military smear propaganda long before the massacre.

贝曾担任泰国中央银行行长，也是一名技术官僚，因廉洁正直而广受高度尊重。作为一名学者，在军方与保皇派主导的保守国家中，他以中左翼观点著称。1973年民众起义后，他在1974年成为第一位由师生选举产生的法政大学校长。在那些动荡的岁月里，法政大学成为激进政治活动的中心——举办公共论坛、出版左翼刊物、组织抗议与示威，甚至为抗议的农民和工人提供庇护。事实上，贝承受着双方的巨大压力：激进派学生把他当成建制的一部分；政治右翼则认定他是共产主义者和激进运动的幕后主谋。这便是一些荒唐却广为流传的谣言的起源，例如法政大学囤积重型武器，或在河底挖掘隧道以准备共产主义叛乱。屠杀发生很久以前，他就已成为军方污蔑宣传的目标。

On October 4, during the students' skit about the hanging of two labor activists, the TU student union also called for the postponement of the examination period. Puey personally negotiated with the activists to end the protest out of respect for those who wanted to take the exam. Yet he was accused of being behind the lèse majesté skit. On the morning of October 6, according to his memoir, he was at a meeting outside TU. Unable to intervene and devastated by the carnage, he tendered his resignation. Meanwhile, the Yan Kro broadcast urged people to find him and punish him for being behind the communist plot to overthrow the monarchy. For safety, he decided to leave the country. At the airport, Village Scouts gathered calling for his head, so to speak. Salang Bunnak, a well-known rightwing figure and a police commander who had led his force into TU in the morning, showed up and confronted Puey, yanking the phone from his hand while he was talking and shouting at him. Puey was detained at the airport for three hours before an order from "the superior" permitted him to let him leave the country.47

10月4日，学生表演了关于两名劳工活动分子被绞死的戏剧，同一天法政大学学生会也呼吁推迟考试。贝亲自与活动分子谈判，希望他们出于对想参加考试的学生的尊重而结束抗议。然而，他却被指控是那出所谓冒犯君主的戏剧的幕后主使。据他的回忆录记载，10月6日早晨，他正在法政大学外开会。由于无法干预局势，又为杀戮所摧垮，他提出辞职。与此同时，Yan Kro的广播呼吁人们找到并惩罚他，因为据称他是推翻君主制的共产主义阴谋的幕后主使。出于安全考虑，他决定离开泰国。在机场，乡村童子军（Village Scouts）聚集起来，简直是在要求取他的首级。著名右翼人物、警察指挥官沙朗·布那（Salang Bunnak）当天上午曾率部进入法政大学，此时也来到机场与贝对峙。贝正在打电话，沙朗从他手中夺过电话，并对他大声斥责。贝在机场被扣留了三个小时，直到"上级"下令，才被允许离境。

For almost a year after the massacre, Puey actively campaigned to tell the world about the massacre.48 His account of the massacre and the coup, written in exile on October 28, 1976, but circulated among his colleagues and followers in Thailand, was influential for several decades, thanks to the credibility of the author and to the lack of other critical accounts during the first few years after the massacre.49 His writings, interviews, public forums, and testimony to the Subcommittee on International Organization of the Committee on International Relations of the US House of Representatives—were probably the most influential counternarrative to that of the state at a time when alternative accounts were either censored or circulated only underground.50 To Puey, and likely to other nonradical intellectuals as well, the tumultuous years between 1973 and 1976 were the result of problems that had compounded during the long military rule since 1947. The student movement was not to blame for those problems. The blame more appropriately should go to those who had lost power, benefits, and privileges after the uprising in 1973, who then tried to rescind the democratic forces by any methods, including negative propaganda and violent measures. The student movement was an important democratic force, in his view, but students tended to be arrogant, inexperienced, and naïve. They fought every issue everywhere all the time, created enemies across every social class, and antagonized too many government agencies. They thought that the public was always on their side, but they were wrong because they had caused considerable political fatigue. Puey expressed understanding for the radicals who had joined the CPT, for the peaceful option of working within a democratic system had been shut down.51

屠杀后将近一年里，贝积极开展活动，向世界揭露屠杀。 他在流亡期间于1976年10月28日写下有关屠杀与政变的叙述，并在泰国的同事和支持者中传播。由于作者的公信力，以及屠杀最初几年里缺乏其他批判性叙述，这份文字此后数十年都具有影响力。 当时其他版本要么受到审查、要么只能在地下秘密传播，贝的文字、访谈、公共论坛发言，以及向美国众议院国际关系委员会国际组织小组委员会作的证词，或许构成了对国家叙述最有影响力的反叙述。 对贝而言，也很可能对其他非激进派知识分子而言，1973年至1976年的动荡，是自1947年以来长期军事统治积累的问题所造成的。学生运动不应为这些问题负责。责任更应该归于那些在1973年起义后失去权力、利益与特权的人；他们随后试图通过一切手段，包括负面宣传和暴力措施，消除民主力量。在贝看来，学生运动是一股重要的民主力量，但学生往往傲慢、缺乏经验、过于天真。他们随时随地为每一个问题抗争，在社会各阶层树敌，与太多政府机构对立。他们以为公众总会站在自己一边，但事实并非如此，因为他们已经造成相当程度的政治疲劳。贝也表示理解那些加入泰国共产党的激进派，因为在民主制度中以和平方式开展活动的道路已被堵死。

In his view, the massacre was definitely not a heroic triumph over the communists but the opposite, because the number and quality of people who joined the CPT after the massacre was unprecedented in the party’s history.52 Puey’s view was not leftist either. Although he expressed sympathy for students, he did not show even slight sympathy or support for the CPT, its ideology, narrative, or armed struggle. He was not overly ideological, seeing Vietnamese communists or US imperialists around every corner. Ideological jargon was nonexistent in his discourse. His prose is straightforward and almost rhetoric-free. His most ideological writing, the short essay “From Womb to Tomb,” in my opinion expresses the basic social democratic ideal.53 Decades later, for many reasons discussed in later chapters, he has become one of the most recognized victims. His views represent the collective memory of the massacre shared by many people, including former radicals who became disillusioned with the CPT.

在贝看来，屠杀绝不是战胜共产主义者的英雄式胜利，反而恰恰相反，因为屠杀后加入泰国共产党的人数和人员素质，在党的历史上前所未有。　　贝的看法也不是左翼的。虽然他同情学生，却没有对泰国共产党及其意识形态、叙述或武装斗争表现出哪怕一点点同情或支持。他并不过分意识形态化，不会在每一个角落都看见越南共产主义者或美帝国主义者。他的话语中不存在意识形态术语，文字直白，几乎没有修辞。在我看来，他意识形态色彩最强的一篇文字，即短文《从子宫到坟墓》（From Womb to Tomb），表达的是基本的社会民主主义理想。　　数十年后，由于后续章节将讨论的多种原因，他成为最受认可的受害者之一。他的观点代表许多人共同拥有的屠杀集体记忆，包括那些后来对泰国共产党感到幻灭的前激进派。

Perhaps the most widely known writing that reflects a nonradical but sympathetic view of the radical students was the short story by Atsiri Thammachote, “Khunthong Will Return at Dawn” (Khunthong chao cha klapma mua fasang), which was first published in the reputed weekly news magazine Sayamrath Sapda Wichan (Sayamrath Weekly) in September 1977, under the repressive regime of Thanin Kraivixian.54 It is the story of Mother, who keeps waiting at the dawn of every new day, looking forward to the return of her son, Khunthong.

反映非激进派立场、却同情激进派学生的文字中，最广为人知的或许是阿齐里·探玛乔（Atsiri Thammachote）的短篇小说《坤通将在黎明归来》（Khunthong Will Return at Dawn, Khunthong chao cha klapma mua fasang）。它于1977年9月，在他宁·盖威迁的压制政权统治下，首次发表于颇有声望的新闻周刊《暹罗国周评》（Sayamrath Sapda Wichan）。　　小说讲述一位母亲每天黎明时分都在等待，期盼儿子坤通（Khunthong）归来。

The story tells us that he left without telling anyone on the day the incident occurred in the rainy season last year, with only one bag on his shoulder. He wept all the time. Mother knows he was angry, but she does not know at whom. She still wonders why he decided to leave the comfort of home to become an outlaw. But she is confident that Khunthong will return home one day and she will be ready to greet him. Even though he does not show up this morning, he will return.55 This is obviously not the voice and memory of a radical but one of their sympathizers, who were waiting for the “new day.” The short story was widely talked about when it first appeared. I recall it as a piece of exciting “news” delivered to us in the prison by our many visitors at that time. It probably represented a voice and collective memory that a large number of people shared but could not express at the time. Although both Mother and Khunthong were fictional, the story represented shared sentiments and memories that were all the more truthful because of the thousands of real mothers and real Khunthongs who could not speak out.

故事告诉我们，去年雨季事件发生的那天，他背着一个包，没有告诉任何人就离开了。他一直在哭。母亲知道他很愤怒，却不知道他在对谁生气。她仍然不明白，他为什么决定离开舒适的家，成为被通缉的人。但她确信坤通总有一天会回家，自己会准备好迎接他。即使他今天早晨没有出现，他也会回来。　　显然，这不是激进派本人的声音和记忆，而是等待“新的一天”的同情者的声音。小说刚发表就引起广泛讨论。我记得，当时许多探监者把它当作令人振奋的“新闻”带进监狱给我们。它可能代表了许多人共同拥有、却无法在当时表达的声音与集体记忆。虽然母亲与坤通都是虚构的人物，但这个故事呈现了共同的情感与记忆；由于成千上万真实的母亲与真实的坤通无法发声，这种虚构反而显得更加真实。

英文原文

Although those nonfictional mothers waited eagerly for their children to come home, many in fact lost them that morning. They were also victims of the massacre by their association with the victims. These extended victims coped with their losses in different ways suitable to their individual conditions. One of the common, noticeable dispositions they shared was their silence in isolation due to the extreme grief and fear that overwhelmed them in the wake of the massacre. For many, grief and fear have still not dissipated.56

虽然那些现实中的母亲热切地等待孩子回家，许多人事实上已在那个早晨失去了孩子。她们也由于与直接受害者的关系而成为屠杀的受害者。这些连带受害者按照各自的个人处境，以不同方式应对丧失。他们共有的一种常见而显著的状态，是屠杀后压倒他们的极度悲伤与恐惧使他们陷入孤立的沉默。对许多人而言，悲伤和恐惧至今仍未消散。

The grief of these parents and relatives was due not only to their senseless and unexpected loss, but also to how their children died and to the public response to their deaths. The degradation of their children to subhuman must be incomprehensibly cruel for them.57 Unlike the typical practice among the ordinary Thais, who would keep the corpse for only a short period and then cremate it, some families were reluctant to cremate their children to avoid detection, or chose to keep their bodies quietly for more than a year, or to bury instead of cremating the body.58 Moreover, in the wake of the massacre, according to almost every family, neighbors and ordinary people looked down on them, harassed them, accusing them of raising communists or of themselves being communists.59 Not only were their children's deaths denied honor, they were also stigmatized for being the enemies of the nation. The brother of one victim told of going to the district officer to remove the name of the victim from his household registration. There, he met a relative of another victim. With the death certificates in their hands, they stood silent. They said nothing to one another, did not even share their grief. They realized that their loved ones had been branded "bad people" in the eyes of the public. They were not sure how people around them might react to the relatives of "bad people" from TU.60 They retreated to their homes, to silence and isolation.

这些父母与亲属的悲伤，不仅源于失去亲人时的荒唐与突如其来，也源于孩子的死亡方式，以及公众对他们死亡的反应。他们的孩子被贬低为非人，这种残酷对家属来说一定难以理解。　　泰国普通民众通常只短时间停放遗体，然后火化；但与此不同，一些家庭为了避免被发现而不愿火化孩子，或者选择悄悄保存遗体一年多，或不火化而改为土葬。　　更何况，根据几乎每一个家庭的说法，屠杀发生后，邻居和普通民众看不起、骚扰他们，指责他们养育了共产主义者，甚至指责他们自己就是共产主义者。　　他们孩子的死亡不仅得不到尊重，孩子们还被污名化为国家的敌人。一位受害者的兄弟讲述，他到区政府办理从户籍登记中注销死者姓名的手续，在那里遇到了另一名受害者的亲属。两人手持死亡证明，默默站着，没有交谈，甚至没有分享彼此的悲伤。他们意识到，在公众眼中，所爱的人已经被贴上了"坏人"的标签。他们不知道周围的人会怎样对待来自法政大学的"坏人"的家属。　　于是他们退回家中，退回沉默与孤立之中。

[P056]

英文原文

The departure of their loved ones was never clarified. No investigation was held, let alone justice dispensed. Worse than having no closure, the victims and their families were stigmatized. Most of these extended victims lived on quietly, trying not to let people know they were relatives of the massacre victims because they could be doubly victimized. It was therefore extremely difficult for most of them to come to terms with their loss. Most admitted that they have not been able to do so even decades later. Most did not attend any of the commemorations that have taken place every year since 1996. But they never forget either. Most continue to make merit for the massacre victims regularly, even every year, but they do so quietly and in isolation.61 They do not seek a collective memory or a public commemoration.

亲人的离去从未得到澄清。没有调查，更不用说伸张正义。比无法获得了结更糟的是，受害者和家人还遭到了污名。大多数连带受害者默默生活，尽量不让别人知道自己是屠杀受害者的亲属，因为他们可能再次受害。因此，对大多数人来说，要接受自己的丧失极为困难；大多数人承认，即便数十年后仍然做不到。自1996年以来，每年都举行纪念活动，但大多数人一次也没有参加。然而，他们也从未忘记。大多数人仍定期，甚至每年为屠杀受害者作功德，却安静而孤立地进行。

他们并不寻求集体记忆或公开纪念。

英文原文

Nevertheless, the silence of these extended victims actually reflects the various ways they individually cope with their traumatic memories. In most cases, silence was not a path to forgetting. Rather, it was a different way to keep the memories of their loved ones alive. Take the case of the family of Suphon Phan. Before 1976, Suphon was a conscripted soldier and indoctrinated to a “hate the students” mentality. His brother, Somtat, persuaded him to attend some student demonstrations and hear what they had to say. Suphon changed. Suphon was shot while driving the injured to the hospital in his van on October 6. A few days later, Suphon’s mother, his elder sister, and Somtat, searched the hospitals to find him. When the mother found her son’s body at a hospital, she lamented until she fainted. After a quiet cremation attended only by family members, according to Somtat, his mother still wept, alone, every day, for months. She gradually came to terms with the loss. As it turns out, Somtat himself was perhaps most affected by Suphon’s death. He felt it was his guilt because had he not convinced Suphon to open his mind to the students, his brother would not have died, and his mother and the whole family would not have hurt. He never went close to any political activity again and never attended a commemoration. His younger sister, who was close to Suphon, however, still honors her dead brother regularly.62 In this case, we can observe that the seemingly similar silence of three people in the same family who suffered the same loss is in fact the expression of different individual ways of coping with trauma.

中文译文

然而，这些连带受害者的沉默，其实反映出他们各自应对创伤记忆的不同方式。在大多数情况下，沉默不是通往遗忘的道路，而是让所爱之人的记忆保持鲜活的另一种方法。以素蓬·潘（Suphon Phan）一家为例。1976年以前，素蓬是一名应征入伍的士兵，受到“仇恨学生”的思想灌输。他的兄弟颂达（Somtat）说服他参加一些学生示威，听听学生们的主张。素蓬改变了看法。10月6日，素蓬开货车送伤者去医院时中弹。几天后，素蓬的母亲、姐姐和颂达寻找各家医院，试图找到他。母亲在医院发现儿子的遗体后，悲痛哭喊，直至昏厥。葬礼只有家属参加，安静地完成火化，但据颂达说，母亲此后几个月仍每天独自哭泣。她逐渐接受了失去儿子的事实。结果看来，受素蓬之死影响最深的或许是颂达本人。他感到自己有罪：如果不是他劝素蓬敞开心扉去了解学生，弟弟就不会死，母亲和全家也不会遭受伤痛。他再也不接近任何政治活动，也从未参加纪念活动。与素蓬关系亲密的妹妹则一直定期纪念亡兄。　　在这个案例里，我们可以看到，同一个家庭中三个人因同一次丧失而表现出看似相似的沉默，实际上却是各自应对创伤的不同方式。

英文原文

Nonetheless, not every grieving mother stays in isolated silence. Lek Witthayaporn, mother of Manu, has been active in seeking out a community of shared grief. During the October 6 trial in 1977 and 1978, Lek attended the trial regularly. Her son was not on trial but she met families of the arrested ones in court. We may say that she joined the families of other victims to support the defendants who were friends of her son. She said in 1996 that she was very sad, of course, but she was proud of her son for who he was and what he tried to do. She wanted to fight until Thai society remembers the October 6 victims. In fact, she wanted to sue whoever caused her son’s death, but could not find relatives willing to join her effort.63

尽管如此，也不是每一位悲伤的母亲都留在孤立的沉默之中。马努（Manu）的母亲莱克·威他亚蓬（Lek Witthayaporn），积极寻找一个能够分享悲伤的群体。在1977年和1978年的10月6日审判期间，莱克经常出席庭审。她的儿子不是被告，但她在法庭上遇到了被捕者的家属。可以说，她加入了其他受害者家庭的行列，支持那些与儿子是朋友的被告。她在1996年说，自己当然十分悲伤，但也为儿子是怎样的人、试图做怎样的事而感到骄傲。她希望一直斗争，直到泰国社会记住10月6日的受害者。事实上，她想起诉导致儿子死亡的人，但找不到愿意加入她这一努力的其他家属。

Lek was a member of the only two families of the victims who have appeared regularly at the commemoration since 1996. A few others attended occasionally but did so quietly, never letting people know that they were relatives of the victims. It is not surprising that they would not join Lek in a lawsuit against the perpetrators. In 2017, when the Documentation of October 6 project contacted them for interviews, many declined. Apart from being hurt by their loss, they remain fearful. They do not want people to know that they were parents or relatives of the victims. Not only has the loss remained an open wound, but the stigma too remains in place. Forty years later, in 2017, many of them characterize the massacre as a sensitive (la-iaton) issue and do not want to get involved in any way. It is not difficult to understand the reasons for their fear and what makes the issue still sensitive after forty years. The state's narrative of the massacre and the stigma it produced, and the fact that the two most sacred institutions in the land—the palace and the Buddhist sangha—had their fingerprints on the horrific events, are the two factors that continue to make the massacre a sensitive subject for public discussion.

自1996年以来，只有两个受害者家庭定期出现在纪念活动中，莱克所在的家庭就是其中之一。另有少数家庭偶尔参加，但都很低调，从不让人知道自己是受害者亲属。他们不愿与莱克一起起诉加害者，并不令人意外。2017年，“10月6日档案项目”（Documentation of October 6）联系他们进行访谈时，许多人拒绝了。除了亲人离去带来的伤痛，他们仍然感到害怕。他们不愿别人知道自己是受害者的父母或亲属。不仅丧失亲人仍是一道未愈合的伤口，污名也始终存在。四十年后，在2017年，他们当中许多人仍把屠杀称为一个“敏感”（la-iaton）问题，不愿以任何方式介入。不难理解他们恐惧的原因，以及为什么四十年后这个问题依然敏感。国家对屠杀的叙述及其制造的污名，以及这个国家最神圣的两个机构——王室与佛教僧团——都在恐怖事件中留下了指纹，这两个因素至今仍使屠杀成为难以公开讨论的敏感话题。

Differences in memories of the massacre reflect the individual situations among the victors and the different kinds of victims. These differences and nuances were amplified by changing politics and changes in their lives in the following decades. As we shall see, the state's memory was so untruthful that it gradually lost credibility. People no longer believe it in Thailand, especially since the Cold War ended in the early 1980s. Despite that, as subsequent chapters explain, its effects and legacy remain powerful and intimidating to many today, bringing fear and silence among relatives and no doubt the general public as well. Hence, silence reigns among these extended victims.

对屠杀的记忆之所以不同，反映了胜利者及不同类型受害者各自所处的个人境况。此后数十年的政治变化与人生经历变化，进一步放大了这些差异与细微区别。正如我们将会看到的，国家的记忆太不真实，因而逐渐失去公信力。在泰国，尤其是20世纪80年代初冷战结束以来，人们已经不再相信它。尽管如此，正如后续章节会解释的，它的影响与遗产直到今天仍强大得足以使许多人感到畏惧，让亲属以及无疑还有一般公众陷入恐惧与沉默。因此，在这些连带受害者中，沉默继续占据主导。
