The Commemoration in 1996

中英逐段对照译本

Thongchai Winichakul · Moments of Silence (2020) · Chapter 6

原文 PDF：Winichakul-Commemoration1996-2020.pdf｜英文与中文逐自然段对应，连续编号；原文图片仅在原始附件实际包含时保留。

[P001] 英文原文：

On the morning of October 6, 1996, a symbolic cremation was held at the soccer field inside Thammasat University for those killed in the massacre twenty years earlier. At that time, their number and identities remained unclear. Details about the number of unidentified, unclaimed bodies remained unknown. The cremation was merely symbolic without a corpse. Instead, we put the name of each known victim on pieces of paper and then put the bits of paper all into an urn, placing it on the top of a platform at the same location I had spoken from that morning twenty years earlier. Around the platform were photos of a few identifiable victims, taken when they were still alive. We honored them as individuals who had names, families, and lives like everybody else, individuals whose lives had ended abruptly on October 6, 1976.

中文译文：

1996年10月6日上午，人们在法政大学（Thammasat University）的足球场上，为二十年前那场屠杀中的死难者举行了一场象征性的火葬仪式。当时，死难者的人数和身份仍不清楚，究竟有多少无人辨认、无人认领的遗体，也没有确切资料。这场火葬只有象征意义，并没有真正的遗体。我们把每一位已知遇难者的姓名写在纸片上，将这些纸片一同放进骨灰瓮，再把骨灰瓮放在一座平台的顶部；那座平台所处的位置，正是二十年前那个早晨我发表讲话的地方。平台四周摆放着一些身份可以确认的遇难者生前的照片。我们以一个个有姓名、有家庭、有自己生活的人来纪念他们，就像纪念其他任何人一样；他们的生命在1976年10月6日突然终止了。

[P002] 英文原文：

The ceremony started at sunrise with an offering of food for the Buddhist monks and was followed by merit-making for the dead. Then a Buddhist monk, a former Maoist ideologue, gave a sermon, urging the audience to abandon greed, hatred, and delusion. The gathering, he said, was not merely to make merit for the dead but also to commemorate them as individuals who deserved respect and recognition, to learn lessons from the past so as not to let such a tragedy happen ever again. “Life may come to an end . . . but dreams stay on. May all dreams become the force of wisdom and love that overcomes hatred and evils that brought an end to the lives of these loved ones.”1 After the sermon, a ritual designed for the occasion began. About fifty Buddhist monks and nuns led a silent walk counterclockwise three times around the soccer field where the fallen victims had lost their lives. It was a Dharma walk, a form of meditation and merit-making for tolerance over hatred, to celebrate those lives that were dedicated to justice and a better future. In the middle of the field stood a big stone gong. Its low-pitched reverberation accompanied the walk.

中文译文：

仪式于日出时开始，人们先向佛教僧侣供奉食物，再为死者做功德。随后，一位曾经信奉毛主义的佛教僧侣讲道，劝人们放下贪欲、仇恨和愚痴。他说，这次聚会不仅是为了给死者做功德，也是为了纪念这些值得尊重和承认的个人，并从过去吸取教训，不让这样的悲剧再度发生。‘生命可能终结……但梦想仍会延续。愿所有梦想化为智慧与爱的力量，战胜导致我们所爱之人失去生命的仇恨与邪恶。’　　讲道结束后，专为此次纪念活动设计的仪式开始了。约五十名佛教僧侣和尼姑带领人们，围绕死难者丧生的足球场逆时针默行三圈。这是一场法行（Dharma walk），通过禅修与积德，以宽容克服仇恨，纪念那些将生命奉献给正义与更美好未来的人。球场中央立着一面巨大的石锣，低沉的锣声伴随着人们的脚步。

[P003] 英文原文：

Twenty years ago, at this place, the sound of gunfire pierced our hearts. Today, the sound of the gong displaces it. The sound of peace will overcome the one of killing . . . , tolerance over hatred, and wisdom over delusion . . . and over The Evil.2

中文译文：

二十年前，在这里，枪声刺痛了我们的心。今天，锣声取代了枪声。和平之声将战胜杀戮之声……宽容将战胜仇恨，智慧将战胜愚痴……并战胜邪恶。

[P004] 英文原文：

The ritual ceremony ended with the symbolic cremation. All participants paid their final respects to all the “bodies” in the urn by putting paper flowers for the dead underneath the urn as is normally done in an actual cremation. As we paid our respects to them one last time, the reality struck me forcibly. It had taken twenty years for us, the former radicals, to honor our friends with the dignity they deserved. In a Buddhist country where compassion and kindness are supposed to be abundant, twenty years was a cruelly . . . long time.

中文译文：

仪式以象征性的火葬告终。所有参加者都按照真正火葬的通常做法，在骨灰瓮下方放上献给逝者的纸花，向瓮中所有的‘遗体’作最后的告别。当我们最后一次向他们致意时，现实猛然击中了我：我们这些当年的激进分子，竟用了二十年才得以给予朋友们应得的尊严。在一个理应充满慈悲与仁爱的佛教国家里，二十年实在是残酷地……漫长。

[P005] 英文原文：

Twenty years later, the radicals of the 1970s had accomplished one of the most important missions of their lives (of my life, at any rate): to publicly cremate and say farewell to friends who had left us in an event that had shaped a whole generation. Unlike most of our other political activities, this one brought about peace of mind. Many of the radicals wept unrestrainedly, myself included. Shedding tears together in public for our lost friends, I think, was a sign that we would no longer weep alone, as we had done for years. Many former radicals recognized this event as a breakthrough in that it made the massacre widely known and allowed their painful past to be recognized and respected by the public. It was a cathartic moment for them, individually and collectively. Nonetheless, it was only a partial break in the silence. The limited discussion of the massacre remained a feature of public discourse. The painful and ambivalent memories were not resolved, the crime was not accounted for. The commemoration successfully established some persistent noise at the edge of remembering and unforgetting.

中文译文：

二十年后，20世纪70年代的激进分子终于完成了他们生命中（至少对我而言）最重要的使命之一：公开为那些在一场塑造了整整一代人的事件中离世的朋友举行火葬，并向他们告别。与我们大多数其他政治活动不同，这次活动带来了内心的安宁。包括我在内，许多曾经的激进分子都抑制不住地哭泣。我想，为失去的朋友在公共场合一同流泪，意味着我们今后不必再像多年来那样独自哭泣。许多前激进分子将这次活动视为突破，因为屠杀终于广为人知，他们痛苦的过去也得到了公众的承认与尊重。对他们来说，无论作为个人还是群体，这都是一次宣泄和净化的时刻。然而，这只是对沉默的一次局部突破。公众话语中对屠杀的讨论仍然有限。痛苦而矛盾的记忆没有得到解决，罪行也没有被追究。这场纪念活动成功地在‘记得’与‘无法遗忘’（unforgetting）的边缘制造了一种持续的声音。

[P006] 英文原文：

This chapter explores the activities at the commemoration of the October 6 massacre and explains the conditions that enabled it to successfully break through such a long period of relative silence. It examines the limits and constraints of remembering the unwanted past in Thailand. The constraints are not limited to those imposed by the state but are inherent in the contesting and retrospective memories of the subjects and objects of memory and in the cultural and intellectual norms embedded in Thai society. They appeared in several commemorating activities and in the monument to October 6 as well.

中文译文：

本章考察纪念十月六日屠杀的各项活动，并解释是什么条件使这次活动得以突破如此漫长的相对沉默。本章还研究了泰国记忆其不愿面对的过去时所遭遇的界限与约束。这些约束并不仅来自国家，也内在于记忆主体与记忆对象彼此竞争、不断回溯的记忆之中，以及深植于泰国社会的文化与知识规范之中。在若干纪念活动和十月六日纪念碑中，这些约束同样有所体现。

[P007] Confronting the State’s Crime Twenty Years Later

中文译文：二十年后直面国家的罪行

[P008] 英文原文：

I, Thongchai, initiated the 1996 commemoration. Given the unresolved silence since 1978, my uneasiness grew each year. That I had survived the massacre and had a comfortable life made my uneasiness grow stronger as time went by. The past is with me everywhere I go. It comes to mind every day. In the mid-1990s, with the growing scholarship on the memory of atrocities and the rise of commemoration in popular culture, the disquieting silence about the October 6 massacre increasingly bothered me. Then, in September 1995, while in Bangkok for research, I decided to write a letter, which I faxed to a few friends, asking them to spread the word to old friends and former activists. The letter invited them to join me at TU on October 6, 1996, one year from then, to make merit to commemorate our fallen friends.3 Given the obscurity of the massacre in public memory at the time, I expected only a modest response. In retrospect, I did not realize how well timed my letter was, nor did I foresee the potential for such a commemoration ceremony. My letter spread among former radicals rapidly. Over the course of the year leading up to October 1996, former activists in groups and individually organized a variety of commemorative activities, turning the initial idea for a merit-making ceremony into a full-blown commemorative movement: a full year of activities and events about the massacre that would culminate in a major commemoration at TU on October 6, 1996.

中文译文：

1996年的纪念活动是由我——通猜（Thongchai）——发起的。自1978年以来，沉默始终没有得到解决，我每年都愈发不安。我在屠杀中幸存下来，而且过着安稳的生活，这反而使我的不安与日俱增。过去无论我去哪里都伴随着我，每天都会浮现在脑海。20世纪90年代中期，随着对暴行记忆的学术研究不断增加，以及纪念活动在大众文化中兴起，围绕十月六日屠杀的令人不安的沉默越来越困扰着我。于是，1995年9月，我在曼谷做研究期间，决定写一封信，传真给几位朋友，请他们把消息传给旧友和以前的活动人士。信中邀请他们一年后，即1996年10月6日，来到法政大学，做功德以纪念我们牺牲的朋友。　考虑到当时这场屠杀在公共记忆中几乎不为人知，我原本只期待少数人响应。回头看，我当时并不知道这封信发出的时机有多么恰当，也未曾预见这场纪念仪式可能产生的影响。信件很快在前激进分子之间传播开来。在1996年10月之前的一年里，各个群体和个人纷纷组织各式纪念活动，使最初一次做功德仪式的想法发展成一场全面的纪念运动：围绕屠杀持续整整一年的活动与事件，最终于1996年10月6日在法政大学举行了大规模纪念活动。

[P009] 英文原文：

The commemoration originated at the conjuncture of several conducive factors. First, by 1995, most former radicals were settled, with families, careers, and stable financial situations. Had the economic crisis in 1997 hit Thailand a year earlier, given its impact on the middle class, the commemoration might not have been so successful. Second, in the mid-1980s, quite a number of former radicals had the opportunities and resources to revive their active interests in public affairs by joining political parties, nongovernmental organizations, or civic groups, and participating in public forums, rallies, and campaigns as active citizens. Third, their political resurgence contributed significantly to the successful struggle against the military regime in 1992. Many sources confirmed that the active participants in the demonstrations that year were people of the 1970s generation.4 Despite the relative silence surrounding the 1976 massacre, these former activists were no longer reluctant to engage in political issues, which they had been after returning from the jungles. Fourth and finally, since the mid-1980s Thailand had enjoyed a relatively open political society and improved human rights situation. The 1992 uprising and victory over the military regime, in particular, had ended decades of struggle against authoritarianism.5 The military retreated from politics for a decade and a half. A boom in press freedom, civic politics, and a strong drive for political reform followed. Thanks to the May 1992 event, we may say, the memory of the 1976 massacre was able to break through the silence of the previous decade.

中文译文：

这次纪念活动的出现，是几个有利因素共同作用的结果。第一，到1995年，大多数前激进分子都已安定下来，有了家庭、事业和稳定的经济状况。鉴于1997年经济危机对中产阶级的影响，如果那场危机

早一年袭击泰国，纪念活动未必能如此成功。第二，自20世纪80年代中期起，不少前激进分子获得了机会与资源，通过加入政党、非政府组织或公民团体，以及参加公共论坛、集会和运动，以积极公民的身份重新投入公共事务。第三，他们在政治上的重新活跃，对1992年成功反抗军人政权的斗争作出了重要贡献。许多资料证实，当年示威活动的积极参与者是20世纪70年代的一代人。　　尽管围绕1976年屠杀的沉默仍相对普遍，这些前活动人士已不再像刚从丛林回来时那样，不愿涉足政治问题。第四，也是最后一点，自20世纪80年代中期起，泰国享有相对开放的政治社会，人权状况也有所改善。尤其是1992年的起义和对军人政权的胜利，结束了数十年反抗威权统治的斗争。　　军方随后退出政治长达约十五年。新闻自由、公民政治蓬勃发展，政治改革的动力也十分强劲。可以说，正是1992年5月的事件，使1976年屠杀的记忆得以突破前一个十年的沉默。

[P010] 英文原文：

The two-day event on October 5 and 6 was not a low-key, sparsely attended commemoration like those of previous years. This one was huge, attended by many thousands. The planned and unplanned programs went quite well, beyond expectations. The media’s attention was unusually high in the weeks leading up to the event, which included an exhibit on the massacre, academic discussions, public speeches, live music and performances, an outdoor art exhibition, publications, videos about the massacre and other major popular uprisings, and religious rituals. Despite the variety of activities, the commemoration was able to present the facts and confront the state’s crime without evasiveness. What had happened twenty years earlier was retold countless times, though without mentioning the role of the palace in the massacre. Video footage of the actual event with actual sound was shown repeatedly and several thousand copies sold. The original video had been discovered in mid-1996 in the archive of TV5. In 1976, it had been used as propaganda to show the state’s triumph over the communists in Bangkok. In 1996, the same footage provided vivid evidence of the police operations outside TU, including brutal scenes with military marching songs in the background. Ironically, this army propaganda became best-selling evidence of the atrocity twenty years later.

中文译文：

10月5日至6日为期两天的活动，并不是过去那些低调、参与者寥寥的纪念活动。这一次规模十分庞大，参加者达数千人。计划内外的各项节目都进行得异常顺利，超出了预期。在活动前的数周里，媒体的关注度之高也非同寻常。活动内容包括屠杀展览、学术讨论、公开演讲、现场音乐与表演、户外艺术展、出版物、关于屠杀及其他重大民众起义的录像，还有宗教仪式。尽管形式多样，纪念活动仍能不加回避地呈现事实，正面面对国家所犯的罪行。二十年前发生的一切被反复讲述了无数遍，尽管人们没有提及王室在屠杀中的作用。当时事件的真实影像连同原声被反复播放，售出了数千份录像拷贝。原始录像于1996年中在第五电视台（TV5）的档案中被发现。1976年，它曾被当作宣传材料，展示国家在曼谷战胜共产党人的胜利。而在1996年，同一段影像却生动地证明了警方在法政大学校外的行动，其中包括以军队行进歌曲为背景的残暴场景。讽刺的是，二十年后，这份军方宣传品竟成为畅销的暴行证据。

[P011] 英文原文：

A powerful account of the crime by the Thai state was presented in the main exhibition hall. Hundreds of thousands of people visited it over the two days. The exhibit was a visual chronology of the events leading up to the massacre and an enactment of the morning including the excessive violence perpetrated on the victim of the hanging in Ulevich’s photo. In one section of the exhibit hall was a life-sized photo of the hanging victim surrounded by delighted spectators. The image was pasted on a huge mirror so that visitors could see themselves in the mirror as if they were participants in the spectacle. Every visitor thus became a witness of the act, experiencing it in a way. Another section of the exhibit contrasted the radical students and the right-wing royalists—their political views and rhetoric, their heroes and enemies, their preferred books and literature, their lifestyles and dress codes. At the end, a question was posed—do these kinds of differences justify killing?6 Undoubtedly the exhibit was the victims' narrative. After twenty years of official lies and evasions, the story from the victims' point of view was powerful and shocking to the visitors, especially the younger generation, who had heard vaguely about the incident but never known or understood what had happened, never realized how heinous it had been. It was the first time the general public had seen what happened in 1976. It took twenty years, an entire generation, for the voice of the victims to be heard loudly and clearly in public.7

中文译文：

主展厅呈现了一份关于泰国国家罪行的有力叙述。两天里有数十万人参观。展览以视觉化的时间顺序展示导致屠杀的事件，并重现那个早晨的情景，包括尤勒维奇照片中被吊死的受害者遭受的极端暴力。展厅一处展区放着一张真人大小的照片，照片中的受害者被吊在空中，周围是神情兴奋的旁观者。照片贴在一面巨大的镜子上，参观者可以在镜中看见自己，仿佛也参与了那场残酷的围观。于是每个人都在某种意义上成为这一行为的见证者，并亲身体验其情境。另一处展区对比了激进学生与右翼保王主义者的政治观点和言辞、英雄与敌人、喜爱的书籍与文学、生活方式和着装习惯。最后提出了一个问题：这样的差异就足以成为杀人的理由吗？　　毫无疑问，展览讲述的是受害者的故事。在官方二十年的谎言与回避之后，受害者视角的叙述对观众产生了强烈而震撼的影响，尤其是对年轻一代。他们从前只是模糊地听说过这件事，却始终不知道、也不理解究竟发生了什么，更不知道其残酷程度。这是普通公众第一次真正看到1976年发生的事情。整整二十年、整整一代人的时间，受害者的声音才得以在公众面前清晰而响亮地被听见。

[P012] 英文原文：

Outside the hall was an outdoor art exhibition by many artists, most of whom were victims of the massacre. It included a live art performance to commemorate a friend, a student of painting who had been killed in the incident. An academic program also ran during the two days, offering presentations of papers on the massacre as well as on the broader and the structural violence in Thai society—from political assassinations and suppressions of civic leaders, the rape and everyday violence against women, to censorship and book banning. Inside the Grand Auditorium were political music and plays, public speeches, and other performances. A drama depicted common experiences of the twice-defeated radical activists. They had lost friends in the massacre and in the revolutionary battles. Eventually they also lost what hope they might have had for a socialist revolution.

中文译文：

展厅外还有众多艺术家参与的户外艺术展，其中多数人是屠杀的受害者。展览包括一场现场行为艺术表演，用来纪念一名在事件中丧生的绘画系学生。为期两天的学术活动也同步进行，既有关于屠杀的论文报告，也有关于泰国社会更广泛的结构性暴力的讨论——从政治暗杀、镇压公民领袖，到强奸和针对妇女的日常暴力，以及审查与禁书等。大礼堂里则上演政治音乐、戏剧、公开演讲及其他表演。一部戏剧表现了曾两度遭遇失败的激进活动人士的共同经历：他们在屠杀和革命战斗中失去了朋友，最终也失去了对社会主义革命可能还抱有的希望。

[P013] 英文原文：

Throughout the commemoration, some negative murmurs said that it was muddying the water instead of letting bygones be bygones. Nonetheless, these reactions were noticeably low and failed to gain any traction in public. The activities throughout the year were held without obstruction from the state or any right-wing groups, except a negligible leaflet from the Aphirak Chakri (Protecting the Chakri dynasty) group that celebrated the October 6 incident as the victory over the communists. It is perhaps not surprising that no condolences were expressed by any dignitaries, let alone the government, nor was there any regret or slightest hint of apology from anyone.

中文译文：

在整个纪念活动期间，也有一些不满的窃窃私语，认为这种活动是在搅浑水，而不是让往事过去。不过，这类反应明显很弱，并未在公众中形成声势。全年各项活动没有遭到国家或右翼团体的阻挠，只有一个名为‘保卫却克里王朝’（Aphirak Chakri）的团体散发了一份影响微乎其微的传单，把十月六日事件歌颂为战胜共产党人的胜利。也许并不令人意外的是，没有任何显要人物表示哀悼，更不用说政府；也没有任何人表现出遗憾，甚至连一丝道歉的意思都没有。

[P014] Rehumanizing the Individuals

中文译文：重新赋予个体以人性

[P015] 英文原文：

At one corner of the soccer field where many lives were cut short were a dozen huge panels, each of which showed the face of the same person (see figure 6a). The panels could easily be seen from across the field. A closer look showed that the picture of the face on each panel was in fact made of hundreds of postcards. One side of each postcard was filled with black and white dots of different sizes (see figure 6b). Each postcard was in fact a jigsaw piece of the gigantic enlargement of a linotyped photo of the face. To put it another way, the photo of the face in black and white had been enlarged to such an extent that the matrices of dots that made up the picture were exposed. Then each face had been cut into postcards. The huge picture of the face was legible only when those postcards were put back in their right places. On the other side of each postcard was the message “We do not forget October 6” (rao mai leum 6 tula), and the address of the producers of these so-called Wall Posters. Thousands of postcards were widely distributed among former activists and others, who were encouraged to write anything they wanted on the postcard. Every recipient of a blank postcard was urged to return the postcards to the producers, otherwise each Wall Poster, that is, each face, could not have been reassembled. Once those thousands of postcards had been reassembled into a dozen faces, people could also read the messages in each of those postcards from the other side of the Wall Posters.8

中文译文：

在足球场的一角，许多生命曾在那里戛然而止，立着十几块巨大的展板，每块板上都是同一个人的脸（见图6a）。从球场对面也能轻易看见这些展板。走近细看，才发现每块展板上的面孔，其实是由数百张明信片组成的。每张明信片的一面布满大小不同的黑白点（见图6b）。每一张实际上都是一幅巨大放大的网点人像中的一块拼图。换言之，黑白面孔被放大到足以看清构成图像的点阵，再被切成一张张明信片。只有将明信片放回正确的位置，巨大的面孔才重新变得可辨。每张明信片的另一面写着‘我们没有忘记十月六日’（rao mai leum 6 tula），以及这些所谓‘墙上海报’（Wall Posters）制作者的地址。数千张明信片被广泛发给前活动人士和其他人，并鼓励他们写下任何想写的话。每一位收到空白明信片的人都被敦促将其寄回制作者那里，否则每幅‘墙上海报’，亦即每张面孔，都无

法重新拼合。数千张明信片最后重新组成了十几张面孔，人们也可以从展板的背面读到每张明信片上的留言。

[P016] 英文原文：

Figure 6a. Jaruphong Wall Posters at the commemoration in 1996. © Sarakhadi. Reprinted with permission.

中文译文：

图6a．1996年纪念活动中的乍鲁蓬‘墙上海报’。 Sarakhadi，经许可转载。

[P017] 英文原文：

Figure 6b. The postcard “We Won’t Forget Jaruphong.” Photo by the author.

中文译文：

图6b．‘我们不会忘记乍鲁蓬’明信片。作者摄影。

B 5
มีใครหลายคน
อยากให้คุณลืม

[P018] 英文原文：

The messages of this activity were in every action in the process of enlarging, disassembling, and reassembling of the face as well as in the act of writing comments by individual participants. Each small action was an expression of the making, unmaking, and remaking of an individual and its humanity. The distinctive life of each individual was large but made of unique details. But lives were dehumanized and blown into oblivion on that Wednesday morning. To rehumanize even one victim and to recognize him, in every sense of the word, required thousands of voluntary and willing participants to return every single postcard. A single missing card would have made the rehumanization of the victim incomplete. Moreover, although each postcard was part of the whole, each remained individually distinctive with messages, mostly handwritten. When one wrote on the postcard, the thought that was contemplated and put into writing was also meaningful. The Wall Posters were filled with the power of remembering and the defiance toward dehumanization. The message beside these dozen panels read, “We do not forget October 6. We do not forget Jaruphong.” It was the face of Jaruphong Thongsin.

中文译文：

这项活动传达的信息贯穿于放大、拆散和重新拼合面孔的每个动作之中，也体现于每个参与者写下评论的行为之中。每一个微小的动作，都是对一个个体及其人性的创造、消解与重建的表达。每个人独特的生命虽然完整而广阔，却由独一无二的细节组成。但在那个星期三的早晨，生命遭到去人性化，并被抛入遗忘。要重新赋予哪怕一位受害者以人性、从所有意义上重新承认他，就需要数千名自愿而积极的参与者将每张明信片寄回。只要缺少一张，受害者的人性重建就不完整。此外，尽管每张明信片都属于整体的一部分，它仍以各自的留言——大多是手写的——保有自己的独特性。人们在明信片上写字时，经过思考并写下的内容本身也有意义。‘墙上海报’充满了记忆的力量和对去人性化的反抗。十几块展板旁写着：‘我们没有忘记十月六日。我们没有忘记乍鲁蓬（Jaruphong）。’那张脸属于乍鲁蓬·通辛（Jaruphong Thongsin）。

[P019] 英文原文：

Enclosed in the envelope distributed with the blank postcard was information about Jaruphong’s life and how he died in the massacre. Jaruphong’s parents and the relatives of many other fallen heroes and heroines were among the dignitaries honored in the symbolic cremation. They were the first in line to lay the paper flowers under the urn before the flame was lit. In addition, on this occasion the Friends of Jaruphong Group funded the renovation of the main meeting room of the Thammasat Student Union Building. An account of the massacre, a list of names of the known dead, the biographies of four TU students who died on that day, including the one of Jaruphong, were displayed on the walls of that room. The room was named Jaruphong Thongsin. After the symbolic cremation, Jaruphong’s parents and the rector of TU presided over its inauguration. The rector reminded us that it was the first room in TU and probably in any Thai university to be named after a student. He hoped it would be the last.

中文译文：

与空白明信片一同发放的信封里，还附有乍鲁蓬生平和他在屠杀中遇难经过的资料。乍鲁蓬的父母以及其他许多已故男女英雄的亲属，是象征性火葬仪式中受到礼遇的贵宾。他们排在最前面，在点燃火焰之前将纸花放在骨灰瓮下。此外，‘乍鲁蓬之友’团体为法政大学学生会大楼主会议室的翻修提供了资金。会议室墙上展示了屠杀的记述、已知遇难者的名单，以及包括乍鲁蓬在内的四名当日遇难的法政大学学生的传记。会议室被命名为‘乍鲁蓬·通辛’。象征性火葬结束后，乍鲁蓬的父母和法政大学校长主持了会议室的揭幕仪式。校长提醒大家，这是法政大学、很可能也是泰国任何一所大学第一次以一名学生的名字命名房间。他希望这也将是最后一次。

[P020] 英文原文：

Meanwhile, a small ritual was independently organized by a Buddhist group to make merit for the dead at every location where people were killed: under the trees where the hanging took place, in the street and in the field where bodies were tossed, nailed, and burned, and several other places on the TU campus. In the evening, the final speeches were given in front of several thousand people on the soccer field. At the very end of the event, people paid their last respects with candles at the platform where the cremation took place in the morning.

中文译文：

与此同时，一个佛教团体独立组织了小型仪式，在所有发生杀戮的地点为死者做功德：有人被吊死的树下、遗体被抛弃、钉刺和焚烧的街道与球场，以及法政大学校园内另外几处地方。傍晚，最后一轮演讲在足球场上面对数千人举行。活动临近结束时，人们来到早晨举行火葬的平台前，手持蜡烛作最后的致意。

[P021] 英文原文：

During the year leading up to October 5–6, 1996, several reunions of former student activists were held. Attempts were made to record the oral history of the radical movement of 1973 through 1976. Some resulted in published records and narratives.9 Quite a few groups then traveled up-country, spending a few days and nights together to recall and record their memories. For many, these gatherings were the first time after returning from the jungles that they had met old friends to revisit the past, to openly talk about it and share their grief within the community of fellow veterans. For many, this was the first time that they no longer had to keep their past strictly to themselves, could instead take pride in what they had been and done, even in the mistakes of their youth.

中文译文：

在1996年10月5日至6日之前的一年里，前学生活动人士举行了多次重聚，并尝试记录1973年至1976年激进运动的口述史，其中一些后来出版成文字记录和叙事作品。 不少团体还前往外府，连续几天几夜共同回忆并记录过去。对许多人而言，这些聚会是他们从丛林归来后，第一次与老朋友重逢，回顾往事，在同为昔日战友的群体中公开谈论经历、分享悲痛。对许多人来说，这也是他们第一次不必再把过去严密地藏在心里，而能够为曾经的自己和自己的所作所为感到骄傲，甚至包括年轻时犯下的错误。

[P022] 英文原文：

The commemorations of 1995 and 1996 also inspired searches for the remains of students as well as other fighters who died during the insurgency. They too faded into oblivion, mostly remembered only by a few friends. After 1996, many former radicals and ex-guerilla fighters began searching for the remains of comrades who had died in the armed struggle. This commemorative activity was, in my opinion, the most difficult and least known but most rewarding effort. Although their faces, names, and identities were remembered very well, in most cases their bodies had been buried in a rush, in battlefields on the front lines or in temporary camps. Locating burial sites was extremely difficult, given that by the mid-1990s the landscapes of the former battlegrounds had changed dramatically. The search teams had to recall and reconstruct particular battles in order to identify the locations where lost friends had been buried or left behind. Every search was painful.

中文译文：

1995年和1996年的纪念活动也启发了对学生以及叛乱期间其他阵亡战士遗骸的寻找。他们同样逐渐被遗忘，通常只有少数朋友记得。1996年以后，许多前激进分子和前游击战士开始寻找在武装斗争中牺牲的同志的遗骸。依我看，这是最艰难、最少为人所知，却也最有回报的纪念工作。尽管他们的面孔、姓名和身份仍被人清楚地记得，多数人的遗体当年却是在前线战场或临时营地匆匆掩埋的。到了20世纪90年代中期，昔日战场的地貌已经发生巨大变化，寻找埋葬地点极其困难。搜寻队必须重新回忆并重建具体战斗的过程，才能确定失去的朋友被埋葬或遗留的地点。每次搜寻都充满痛苦。

[P023] 英文原文：

These commemorative activities involved many people. In the search for each individual, the survivors had to revisit the past, recalling what happened, digging up memories of their traumatic pasts even as they dug up earth. They had to overcome the refuge of silence and the propensity to evasiveness. Through these activities, past and present could be connected in ways that people could live with, enabling them to make sense of their current lives. The reconstitution of each individual, both the fallen victims and the living ones, was significant possibly without their awareness. For the dead victims, individuality—face, voice, name, identity, and family—is what allows them to be seen as people like us, not a faceless enemy of the nation, religion, and monarchy, and not as faceless martyrs known only by the name of the incident in which they died. At the same time, it is their individual identities that remind us what has been lost in the crime—honorable people whose lives were like ours, whose pain could happen to anyone, including us. Individually—not as a collective crowd—is the proper way to honor a noble life.

中文译文：

这些纪念活动牵涉许多人。每寻找一位个人，幸存者都必须重返过去，回想发生过什么；他们在挖掘泥土的同时，也挖出了创伤往事的记忆。他们必须摆脱沉默所提供的避难所，克服回避的倾向。通过这些活动，过去与现在得以用人们可以承受的方式重新连接，使他们能够理解自己当下的生活。无论对已逝的受害者还是活着的人，每个个体的重建都具有重大意义，尽管他们未必意识到这一点。对死者来说，个体性——面容、声音、姓名、身份与家庭——使我们能够把他们看作与自己一样的人，而不是没有面孔的国家、宗教和王室之敌，也不是只以他们死于哪场事件而为人所知的无名烈士。与此同时，正是这些个体身份提醒我们，这场罪行究竟夺走了什么：那些有尊严的人，他们过着和我们一样的生活，他们遭受的痛苦也可能发生在任何人身上，包括我们自己。尊重一段高贵生命的适当方式，是将其视为个体，而不是集体人群中的一员。

[P024] 英文原文：

For the living victims, in my view, no matter how powerful a collective commemoration may be, individual experiences of private trauma have no substitute, and their memories can never be completely merged into a collective. The activities that allow individuals to come to terms with their individual pasts in their own ways while participating in a collective commemoration were the best.

中文译文：

对于活着的受害者，我认为，无论集体纪念具有多大力量，个人的私人创伤经历都无法替代，他们的记忆也永远无法完全融入集体。最好的纪念活动，是让个人在参与集体纪念的同时，能够以自己的方式与个人的过去达成和解。

[P025] Collectively, Commemorating Whom?

中文译文：集体纪念的究竟是谁?

[P026] 英文原文：

One of the most heated arguments among the former radicals revolved around how to characterize the victims and the student movement during the 1973 to 1976 period. How would we want the public to remember them? Were they communists, radicals, democracy lovers, or just young idealists? Gradually during the year of the commemoration, differences and divisions, even conflicts, emerged among the organizers and former radicals over concrete and practical issues too, such as what should the slogan of the commemoration be, what kinds of activities should be staged with what messages, whether to confront the issue of violence and brutality, the extent to which to expose the perpetrators, and so on. The debate on these issues revealed the serious contestation of memories among former radicals who had lived through the same experience. Some tried to impose censorship. Others claimed the correct memory.

中文译文：

前激进分子之间最激烈的争论之一，围绕着如何界定1973年至1976年期间的受害者和学生运动。我们希望公众怎样记住他们？他们是共产党人、激进分子、民主爱好者，还是仅仅是年轻的理想主义者？在纪念活动筹备的一年里，组织者和前激进分子之间逐渐显现出差异、分歧，甚至冲突，涉及许多具体而实际的问题：纪念活动应使用什么口号，应举办传达何种信息的活动，是否要直面暴力与残酷，应该在多大程度上揭露加害者，等等。围绕这些问题的争论表明，即使前激进分子经历过同样的事件，他们之间的记忆仍存在激烈竞争。有些人试图施加审查，另一些人声称自己掌握了正确的记忆。

[P027] 英文原文：

On the one hand were the people who wanted to recognize the martyrs as nonradical, democratic activists who fought against military rule, whose idealism was for a better, caring, and equitable society.10 Despite the radicalism they expressed, they were merely youthful idealists, not communists, not threatening radicals, and not enemies of the country. Some went so far as to argue that the students who died on October 6 and those who joined the Communist Party of Thailand (CPT) were not the same.11 A commemoration in this view hoped to counter right-wing allegations by emphasizing the contributions of these young idealists for a better society. Speaking in the age of image making, some even suggested that the martyrs, and thereby the movement in the 1970s, should be presented in the romanticized image that was acceptable to the public and avoid any hint of the radical past. Some intentionally opposed mentioning the radical past in the narrative of the massacre and argued for some censorship as well. For them, the major activities leading to the big event in October included a special address on the future of Thai democracy by a former prime minister, a respected senior social critic, and other established public figures. Some people with this view wanted the commemoration not to dwell on the massacre, violence, death, state crime, or the past. The dubious past should not be the focus, they argued, so much as the future.

中文译文：

一方希望把牺牲者认可为非激进的民主活动人士，他们反抗军人统治，怀抱的理想是建设一个更美好、更有爱心、更平等的社会。　　尽管他们表达过激进主义思想，他们终究只是年轻的理想主义者，而不是共产党人、具有威胁性的激进分子或国家的敌人。有些人甚至主张，10月6日遇害的学生与加入泰国共产党（Communist Party of Thailand，CPT）的学生并非同一群人。　　按照这一观点，纪念活动应强调这些年轻理想主义者对改善社会的贡献，以反驳右翼的指控。在重视塑造形象的时代，有些人甚至建议把烈士及整个20世纪70年代运动塑造成公众能够接受的浪漫形象，避免露出任何激进过去的痕迹。还有人刻意反对在屠杀叙事中提及激进过去，甚至主张采取一定程度的审查。在他们看来，十月大型活动之前的重点项目，应包括一位前总理、一位受人尊敬的资深社会评论家及其他社会名流关于泰国民主未来的特别演讲。持这种观点的一些人不希望纪念活动过多纠缠于屠杀、暴力、死亡、国家罪行或过去。他们认为，重点不该放在可疑的过去，而应放在未来。

[P028] 英文原文：

On the opposite end were the people who insisted that the past must be remembered as a radical, socialist movement and the massacre as an event intended to eliminate the socialist movement. To remember otherwise would be to expunge the radical movement from memory. Any avoidance of the “indisputable fact” that the student movement in the past had been radical was to deny history. “If there was even one dead victim who considered himself a socialist. . . . he should be recognized as such,” one scholar noted.12 In this view, any other interpretation distorted the facts and history, and any memory that did not recognize the socialist movement should be dismissed. They strongly censured my letter to friends that triggered the commemoration because, they argued, it propagated the distortion and the denial of radical history. Somsak Jeamteerasakul, the main propagator of this sanctimonious view, declared that it would have been better not to remember the massacre at all, had we not remembered the movement “correctly” as a socialist one.13 This view was influential, especially among the young radicals of the 1990s generation, but not among the 1970s radicals. The radical critics of the commemoration alleged that most organizers, myself included, were deniers of history trying to cleanse their radical past.14

中文译文：

另一极则是那些坚持必须把过去记作一场激进的社会主义运动、把屠杀记作旨在消灭社会主义运动的事件的人。否则，就是从记忆中抹去激进运动。回避过去学生运动的激进性这一‘无可争辩的事实’，便是否认历史。一位学者指出：‘哪怕只有一位死难者认为自己是社会主义者……我们也应当承认他是社会主义者。’　　在这种观点看来，任何其他解释都会扭曲事实与历史，任何不承认社会主义运动的记忆都应该遭到摒弃。他们强烈谴责我那封引发纪念活动的致友人信，因为他们认为那封信传播了对历史的歪曲，否认了激进历史。这种自以为道德高尚的观点的主要倡导者颂萨·坚提拉沙恭（Somsak Jeamteerasaku1）宣称，如果不能‘正确地’将这场运动记为社会主义运动，那么还不如完全不要纪念屠杀。　　这种看法具有影响力，尤其受到20世纪90年代年轻激进分子的支持，但在70年代的激进分子中并不流行。那些激进的批评者指责，大多数组织者——包括我——都是试图洗白自己激进过去的历史否认者。

[P029] 英文原文：

Most organizers and participants in the commemoration took neither of these polar positions but instead a mix of them, as reflected in the activities, such as the exhibits, publications, and public discussions. The polar views represented the parameters of possible memories among the former radicals. A more nuanced position is not illogical or contradictory and, in my opinion, is in fact probably more accurate. Besides, the representation of the radical past changed even during the commemorative year. The gradual declawing of the past radicalism had begun since the end of the domestic Cold War in the mid-1980s, reflected in the commercialization of revolutionary songs,15 and the melancholic and nostalgic writings by the ex-leftists. By the mid-1990s, those nostalgic materials were no longer dangerous in the eye of the state. Yet most former radicals were still reluctant to speak out about who they once were and thus kept their thoughts to themselves. In this unclear atmosphere, many, myself included, were initially cautious about how we could represent the radical past in public that would not elicit a backlash from the authorities or the public. As the commemorative movement unfolded over the course of the year, nostalgic stories of the radical past snowballed without any sign of a backlash among the public. The romanticized depiction was preferred in the initial phase of the commemorative movement but faded as the movement grew stronger. Advocates of the more radical view emerged later but most former radicals did not subscribe to it.

中文译文：

大多数纪念活动的组织者与参与者都没有站在上述任何一个极端，而是把两种观点结合起来，这体现在展览、出版物和公开讨论等活动中。两种极端观点代表了前激进分子可能拥有的记忆范围。立场更细致并不意味着不合逻辑或自相矛盾；在我看来，它实际上可能更准确。此外，对激进过去的呈现，即使在纪念活动那一年里也不断变化。自20世纪80年代中期国内冷战结束以来，过去激进主义的锋芒就已逐渐被削弱，革命歌曲的商业化　　，以及前左翼人士忧郁而怀旧的文字，都是这种趋势的反映。到了90年代中期，国家眼中这些怀旧材料已不再危险。然而，多数前激进分子仍不愿公开谈论自己曾经的身份，因而把想法藏在心里。在这种不明朗的气氛下，包括我在内的许多人最初都十分谨慎，不知道怎样在公众面前呈现激进的过去，才能避免当局或公众的反弹。随着纪念运动在这一年里展开，怀念激进过去的故事越来越多，却未见公众反弹。浪漫化的描绘在运动初期较受青睐，但随着运动壮大而逐渐退去。更为激进的观点的倡导者后来出现了，不过大多数前激进分子并不接受他们的主张。

[P030] 英文原文：

How they characterize their collective past was informed by subsequent experience and the present. Memory is always an interpretive outcome of individual and social perspectives. Most former radicals did not perceive their past the same way as radicals in 1996 do simply because they were no longer radical. The claimed “correct” history cannot and should not dictate their memories. In addition, before turning radical in the mid-1970s, they were ideologically diverse— idealist, nationalist, liberal, even conservative and royalist (as discussed in chapter 3). In the long perspective of their lives, the radical experience did not last. Looking back from the mid-1990s, they saw youthful idealists, highly politicized and engaged citizens who turned radical in response to many factors of that time. Over the years, former radicals had become a generation of engaged and often opinionated citizens subscribing to various shades of politics and ideologies. By 1996, they had diverse views of how the past is meaningful to them in (and to) the present. Their memories of the radical movement may seem akin to the first view, except that they did not deny their radical or even communist years. At the commemoration, although some were still reluctant, overly cautious, or even wanting to deny their radical past, most did not shy away from talking openly about the past and their jungle years as communist fighters. They talked about these years in public forums, wrote memoirs, and so on, apparently because most were proud of their experiences. They openly identified themselves not only by the name of the university and the activist groups they were affiliated with but also by their code names and the CPT bases at which they operated. Indeed, dozens more monuments to honor communist martyrs sprang up across the country after 1996.16

中文译文：

他们如何界定自己的集体过去，受到后来经历和当前处境的影响。记忆始终是个人和社会视角下解释的结果。大多数前激进分子对过去的理解，并不等同于1996年激进分子的理解，原因很简单：他们已不再激进。所谓‘正确’的历史既不能也不应决定他们的记忆。此外，在20世纪70年代中期变得激进以前，他们的思想本就多种多样：理想主义、民族主义、自由主义，甚至保守主义和保王主义（见第3章）。从一生的长时段来看，激进经历并未持续很久。从90年代中期回望，他们看到的是一群年轻理想主义者，一批高度政治化、积极参与公共事务的公民，他们在当时多种因素的影响下转向激进。多年以来，这些前激进分子已经成为一代关心公共事务、往往有鲜明观点、在政治和意识形态上各持不同立场的公民。到1996年，他们对于过去在当下对自己有何意义，形成了多元看法。他们关于激进运动的记忆看起来可能接近第一种观点，但不同的是，他们并不否认自己曾经激进、甚至是共产党人的岁月。纪念活动期间，虽然有些人依旧不愿开口、过分谨慎，甚至想否认激进过去，但多数人并不回避公开谈论过去和自己作为共产主义战士在丛林中的岁月。他们在公共论坛发言、撰写回忆录等，显然是因为多数人对自己的经历感到自豪。他们公开介绍自己时，不仅提及所属大学和活动团体，还提

到自己的化名以及曾活动的泰共基地。事实上，1996年之后，全国各地又出现了几十座纪念共产主义烈士的纪念碑。

[P031] 英文原文：

The hiding of their past was over. For many, individually and collectively as a community of former radicals, the commemoration was the cathartic moment when and where they could express who they were, what they had gone through, and what they thought. They no longer needed to hide for fear of rejection.17 One personal anecdote was telling. An old friend walked with obvious joy in the middle of the gathering on the evening of the commemoration day. When he saw me, he called to me loudly from twenty meters away in a voice that dozens of people could hear loud and clear, “Hey, Thong! I want to tell everybody in my office and in the world that I was (am) a communist [pause] So what?!” In Thai, the verb to be, pen, is not variable by the tense. So I was not sure whether he was or still is a communist. In any case—so what?!

中文译文：

隐瞒过去的时代结束了。对许多人而言，不论是作为个体还是作为前激进分子群体的一员，纪念活动都是一个情感得以宣泄的时刻和场所，使他们能够表达自己是谁、经历过什么以及在想什么。他们不再需要因为害怕被排斥而躲藏。　　一则个人轶事很能说明这一点。在纪念日的傍晚，一位老朋友明显兴高采烈地走在人群中。他一看到我，就从二十米外朝我大声喊，周围几十个人都能听得清清楚楚：‘喂，通！我要告诉办公室里的每个人，告诉全世界：我曾经是（现在是）共产党人！［停顿］那又怎样？！’泰语中表示‘是’的动词 pen 并不随时态变化，所以我不确定他是过去曾经、还是现在仍是共产党人。无论如何——那又怎样？！

[P032] 英文原文：

More important, however, the contested memories of these former radicals were not independent from the larger public memory. The media and the public reflected and informed one another in shaping the public perceptions of the radical past as well. As explained in earlier chapters, during the period of silence, the polarized views subsided and moderate views gained ground, and, as discussed in chapter 8, the public increasingly identified with the view of Puey. The commemoration took place in this milieu. During the commemorative year, the media and public on the one hand, and the former radicals on the other, informed one another. The media was influential in shaping how the public remembered the massacre and these former radicals as well. The media is, however, never a blank sheet of paper without ideology or prior intellectual disposition. It takes information and presents it through its own lenses. The media characterized the massacre, those turbulent years, and the former radicals in ways that were shaped by their own perspectives. An analysis that focuses exclusively on the debates among the former radicals gives them too much credit even as it overlooks the role of the media in shaping public perceptions and the influence of both media and public on the former radicals.

中文译文：

然而，更重要的是，这些前激进分子相互竞争的记忆，并非独立于更广泛的公共记忆而存在。媒体与公众也相互反映、相互影响，共同塑造社会对激进过去的理解。前面章节解释过，在沉默时期，两极化观点逐渐消退，温和观点日益占据主导；如第8章所述，公众也越来越认同贝·温帕功（Puey）的立场。纪念活动正是在这种氛围中发生的。在纪念的这一年里，媒体与公众是一方，前激进分子是另一方，双方相互影响。媒体在塑造公众如何记忆屠杀和这些前激进分子方面，同样具有影响力。但媒体从不是一张没有意识形态或先在思想倾向的白纸；它通过自己的镜头获取并呈现信息。媒体对屠杀、那段动荡岁月及前激进分子的界定，都受自身观点塑造。如果分析只聚焦于前激进分子之间的辩论，就会过分夸大他们的作用，同时忽视媒体在塑造公众观感中的角色，以及媒体与公众对前激进分子本身的影响。

[P033] Breaking the Silence . . . but under Limits

中文译文：打破沉默……但仍有界限

[P034] 英文原文：

As an initiator of the commemorative movement living half a world away from Thailand at a time when email service was limited, I did not fully participate in the debate. In my opinion, breaking the silence should not be an attempt to sanitize memory, either to deny the uncomfortable past or to flaunt a sanctimoniously correct past. Memories from all perspectives should be allowed to exist and contest in the public sphere. Without control or censorship, the commemoration in 1996 opened up such a space for multiple memories. The breakthrough was possible because multiple memories found their space in the public sphere. My friend's greeting me was evidence of a joy that perhaps he had not felt in a long time. It was not the joy of triumph over an opponent. It was not a jolly mood without sadness. It was the joy of being oneself again, to borrow Kasian's words. To me, the cathartic effects on these individuals were the most important outcome of the commemoration.18 The stigma—the fear of being rejected—had gone. The cloud of silence was irreversibly penetrated.

中文译文：

作为纪念运动的发起者，我当时远在地球另一端，而电子邮件服务又很有限，因此并未充分参与争论。在我看来，打破沉默不应意味着清洗记忆：既不应否认令人不安的过去，也不应炫耀一种自以为道德正确的过去。不同立场的记忆都应获准在公共领域存在并相互竞争。1996年的纪念活动没有施加控制或审查，从而为多种记忆打开了这样的空间。突破之所以可能，正是因为不同记忆都在公共领域找到了位置。那位朋友向我打招呼时的喜悦，证明他也许已很久没有体会过那种快乐。那并不是战胜对手的胜利喜悦，也不是毫无悲伤的欢快心情；借用卡西安（Kasian）的话，那是终于能够重新做自己的喜悦。对我来说，纪念活动对这些个体所产生的情感净化作用，是它最重要的成果。　　污名，以及被排斥的恐惧，消失了。笼罩着我们的沉默阴云已经被不可逆转地穿透。

[P035] 英文原文：

The commemoration was, however, not a magic spell that could entirely dispel the ambivalence and silence about the massacre in Thai society. Many activities hit various limits of what can be spoken. The commemoration was probably the first of its kind for people who had been regarded as enemies of the nation, religion, and the monarchy. Recognition of the dead still faced many obstacles. It took place in the political environment of hyperroyalism and the post- 1976 consensus. I elaborate on this condition in chapter 8. For now, it is enough to say that such conditions underpinned the regime of Democracy with the Monarchy as the Head of the State—or royal democracy.19 In 1996, most powerful people and institutions that had been involved in the massacre remained in power. The palace was considered even more sacred and beyond criticism than in the 1970s. The participants in the 1996 commemoration, unavoidably, observed this limit and practiced self-censorship with regard to any utterances that involved the monarchy. The October 6 exhibition, for example, planned to show Dao sayam's front page of October 5, 1976, with the photo that triggered the royalist hysteria. It would have been the first time since 1976 that this photo was shown in Thailand. Then, a few hours before the opening of the exhibition, the organizers and the exhibition producers had second thoughts. They were not sure whether the photo might trigger another controversy and another charge of lèse majesté from the right wing. They decided to take it down at the last minute, leaving the space blank and the description intact as if the photo were still there.

中文译文：

然而，纪念活动并不是一种魔法，不能完全驱散泰国社会围绕屠杀的矛盾心理与沉默。许多活动都遭遇到不同的‘什么可以说’的界限。这场纪念活动很可能是第一次为曾被视为国家、宗教和王室之敌的人举行此类活动。承认死者仍面对许多障碍。活动发生在高度保王主义与‘1976年后共识’的政治环境中，我将在第8章详述这些条件。这里仅需指出，这种条件是‘以国王为国家元首的民主制度

’——或称王室民主制——的基础。　　1996年，大多数参与过屠杀的权势人物和机构仍然掌权。王室被认为甚至比20世纪70年代更加神圣，更不容批评。因此，1996年纪念活动的参与者不可避免地遵守这一界限，对任何涉及王室的言论进行自我审查。例如，十月六日展览原计划展出《暹罗之星》（Dao sayam）1976年10月5日的头版，上面刊登了引发保王主义狂热的照片。这原本将是该照片自1976年以来首次在泰国公开展出。但就在开幕前几小时，组织者和展览制作人员又犹豫起来。他们不确定这张照片是否会再次引发争议，以及右翼可能再次提出的冒犯君主罪指控。最后一刻，他们决定撤下照片，留下空白，而原来的说明文字仍在，仿佛照片依然挂在那里。

[P036] 英文原文：

Given that the silence since 1978 was for the sake of reconciliation and national unity, such concerns were often raised against the commemorative movement. From the beginning to the end of the commemorative year, unease was palpable that the event might open old wounds and that the former radicals might seek revenge. Ironically, throughout the year, no serious discussion was held about the perpetrators. Apart from the usual targets such as the Red Gaurs, the organizers, the media, or academics made no effort to expose who should be accountable for the crimes, the propaganda, the false accusation, the Thanom conspiracy, the mobilization of hatred, the desecration of the dead bodies, and so on. In fact, former radicals, myself included, were repeatedly asked by the media to confirm that we did not seek revenge of any kind. In other words, people sympathized with the victims but were unwilling to pursue accountability in fear of ensuing turmoil. The culture of elite impunity is pervasive in Thailand, and the rich and powerful usually find ways, legal or not, to evade accountability. Retaliation against those who seek justice is a real threat. As a result, concerned citizens know to stay within certain limits and when they must keep silent. That this phenomenon was occurring with the commemorations suggests that people knew that the perpetrators of the massacre were powerful, highly placed individuals. The discourse on those perpetrators remains elusive, slippery, and off limits.

中文译文：

由于自1978年以来的沉默被认为是为了和解与国家团结，这类顾虑在整个纪念运动期间屡屡出现。从纪念活动那一年的开始直到结束，人们都明显担心活动可能揭开旧伤疤，前激进分子可能寻求报复。讽刺的是，整整一年里，几乎没有针对加害者的严肃讨论。除了‘红牛’（Red Gaurs）等惯常的指责对象，组织者、媒体或学者没有努力揭露，究竟谁应当为罪行、宣传、虚假指控、他侬回国的阴谋、煽动仇恨、亵渎遗体等行为负责。事实上，包括我在内的前激进分子不断被媒体要求确认：我们不会寻求任何形式的报复。换言之，人们同情受害者，却因害怕随后出现的动荡而不愿追究责任。精英阶层不受惩罚的文化在泰国根深蒂固，富人和权贵通常能够以合法或非法方式逃避问责。对寻求正义者的报复是真实的威胁。因此，关切公共事务的公民都知道自己必须停留在什么界限之内，何时必须保持沉默。这种现象出现在纪念活动中，说明人们知道屠杀的加害者是身居高位的权势人物。围绕加害者的话语仍然难以捕捉、模糊滑动，处于不可触及的范围。

[P037] 英文原文：

On the other hand, many journalists also asked many times if we had forgiven or were ready to forgive. In Buddhist Thailand, a victim is expected to offer forgiveness whether someone has confessed to wrongdoing or not because the aim of forgiveness is to purify one’s mind. It is about individual moral well-being. Forgiveness of this kind does not require any kind of social or legal justice. Justice and the rule of law is secondary. Karma, it is believed, will do the job of justice. Many former radicals expressed their forgiveness based on the Buddhist notion of loving kindness. (I discuss the Buddhist approach to atrocity and its implications for justice in chapter 7.)

中文译文：

另一方面，许多记者还反复问我们是否已经原谅，或是否准备原谅。在佛教影响深厚的泰国，无论作恶者是否承认罪行，受害者都被期待给予宽恕，因为宽恕的目的在于净化自己的心灵。这关乎个人的道德福祉。这种宽恕不需要任何形式的社会或法律正义。正义与法治是次要的。人们相信，业报（karma）会执行正义。许多前激进分子基于佛教的慈爱观念表达了宽恕。（我在第7章讨论佛教对待暴行的方式及其对正义的影响。）

[P038] 英文原文：

Throughout the year of commemoration, therefore, the discourse on the massacre was mainly about violence, brutality, tragedy, the intolerance toward diverse ideas and ideologies, and the toxic politics that had emerged because of these problems. Undoubtedly, these concerns were important and valuable subjects of discussion. Unfortunately, no serious probing for truth was undertaken. Justice and the rule of law were put aside. Even years later, as some critics of the commemoration point out, the discourse on the massacre remains about brutality and tears but nothing further.20 Occasionally, calls were made for an investigation into this ugly episode of Thai history, such as the efforts of some academics in 2001 mentioned in a previous chapter, but the public did not seem to care. In this respect, it is fair to say that although the commemoration pointed to the problematic norms of the absence of justice and truth seeking, it did not put truth and justice within reach.

中文译文：

因此，在整个纪念年中，围绕屠杀的话语主要讨论的是暴力、残酷、悲剧、对不同思想与意识形态的不容忍，以及由这些问题产生的有毒政治。毫无疑问，这些都是重要且有价值的讨论议题。遗憾的是，人们没有认真追查真相，正义与法治被搁置。甚至多年后，正如一些纪念活动的批评者所指出的，关于屠杀的话语仍停留在残酷和眼泪上，并无进一步进展。　　偶尔有人呼吁调查泰国历史这一丑恶篇章，例如前一章提到2001年某些学者的努力，但公众似乎并不在意。就这一点而言，可以公允地说，尽管纪念活动指出了缺乏正义与真相追寻的规范性问题，却并没有让真相与正义变得触手可及。

[P039] 英文原文：

Despite all these limitations, an important accomplishment of the commemoration was the irreversible shift in the relative power between the perpetrator’s and the victim’s memories of the massacre. Since the commemoration, the victims have become more vocal and the perpetrators have become evasive, apologetic, or even silent. However, even though earlier radicalism was no longer dangerous to talk about, these former radicals were kept within limits. The perpetrator’s silence is different from that of the victims in that the perpetrators can take refuge behind the limits that the victims cannot cross. The silence protects them; they need not break it.

中文译文：

尽管存在这些局限，纪念活动的一项重要成就是不可逆转地改变了加害者与受害者两种屠杀记忆之间的相对力量。自那以后，受害者越来越敢于发声，加害者则变得回避、带有歉意，甚至沉默。然而，即使谈论过去的激进主义已经不再危险，前激进分子仍受到限制。加害者的沉默与受害者的沉默不同，因为加害者能够躲在受害者无法逾越的界限后面。沉默保护了他们；他们无需打破它。

[P040] Monument to October 6 and Its Paradox

中文译文：十月六日纪念碑及其悖论

[P041] 英文原文：

Today, on entering the main entrance of TU, next to the Grand Auditorium (see map), across the street from Sanamluang, we see on our right hand the October 6 Monument (figure 7). It is, as Thom Huebner describes it,

中文译文：

今天，从法政大学正门进入校园，在大礼堂旁、与皇家田广场（Sanamluang）隔街相望的位置（见地图），我们会在右侧看到十月六日纪念碑（图7）。正如汤姆·休布纳（Thom Huebner）所描述的，它是：

[P042] 英文原文：

a massive granite slab . . . approximately one meter high at its highest point, one meter deep, and six meters long. Its low contour requires one to look down at, rather than up toward the monument, as if encountering a tombstone. . . . its mass and solidity, the date 6 Tula 2519 (October 6, 2519 in the Buddhist calendar) chiseled in heavy angular letters and its color evocative of coagulated blood suggest a harsh objective reality. Its uneven horizontal surface forebodes an uncertain future . . . The bold “in your face” inscription of the date resembles graffiti, suggesting a transgressive semiotics symbolizing the monument as conceived (without government support) its emplacement (on the site of a transgressive act), and the act itself that the monument commemorates. Embedded in the crevices formed by the chiseled letters are bronze bas-relief faces of some of the students who were massacred that day. Along the vertical back and sides of the monument are engraved the names of all the known victims who died by hanging, guns and mortars that day. Around the perimeter of the base is a quote from the then Rector of the University, in both Thai and English [all in upper case]: “What is most regrettable is the fact that young people now have no third choice. If they cannot conform to the government, they must run away. Those interested in peaceful means to bring about freedom and democracy must restart from square one.” Dr. Puey Ungphakorn, from “the violence and the coup” of 6th October 1976.21

中文译文：

一块巨大的花岗岩石板……最高处约一米高、一米深、六米长。它低矮的轮廓使人必须低头俯视，而不是抬头仰望，仿佛面对一块墓碑……它的体量与坚实质感、以粗重棱角分明的字体凿刻的日期‘6 Tula 2519’（佛历2519年10月6日），以及令人联想到凝结血液的颜色，都指向一种严酷的客观现实。它凹凸不平的水平表面预示着不确定的未来……醒目而直逼眼前的日期刻字类似涂鸦，暗示了一种越界的符号意义，象征这座纪念碑的构想（没有政府支持）、它的安放（位于越界行为发生之处），以及纪念碑所纪念的行为本身。凿刻文字形成的缝隙中，嵌有当日遇难的一些学生的青铜浅浮雕面孔。纪念碑背面和侧面的垂直立面上，刻着所有已知在当日被绞死、枪杀或迫击炮炸死的受害者的姓名。基座周围以泰文和英文［全部大写］刻着当时大学校长的一段话：‘最令人遗憾的是，如今的年轻人已没有第三种选择。如果他们不能顺从政府，就只能逃走。那些希望通过和平手段争取自由与民主的人必须从头再来。’贝·温帕功博士（Dr. Puey Ungphakorn），引自1976年10月6日《暴力与政变》。

[P043] 英文原文:

A monument helps memory last, as if it stops the flow of time by planting the concrete embodiment of memory in public space. Such is a positivistic and simplistic view of a monument, definitely inadequate for the October 6 Monument. In recent times around the world, a monument or monuments try to accommodate multiple memories and changing perspectives of the past rather than a fixed story and meaning. In this regard, a concrete monument usually employs paradoxical mnemonic devices to impart the unchanged and the changed, and ultimately represents the remembered and the forgotten.22

中文译文:

纪念碑有助于使记忆长久留存，仿佛它将记忆的具体化身安置在公共空间，便阻止了时间的流逝。这是一种实证主义而简化的纪念碑观念，显然不足以解释十月六日纪念碑。近些年，世界各地的纪念碑越来越尝试容纳多种记忆和对过去不断变化的视角，而不是固定的故事和意义。在这一意义上，一座实体纪念碑往往借助悖论式的记忆装置，同时传达不变与变化，并最终呈现被记住和被遗忘的东西。

[P044] 英文原文：

The monument to October 6 is the concrete embodiment of the paradoxical condition of memories of the massacre after the commemoration in 1996. On the one hand, it firmly and literally establishes the memory of the tragedy in public space, marking the changing public landscape of memories of the massacre since the mid-1990s. The memory of October 6 is now audible, not silent. It also hints at the possibility of other memories that have not yet been articulated or recognized, that have been lost and forgotten or remain in the realm of the unforgetting. Yet, the monument's design and location embody the limits, what can be said and what cannot, in subtle ways, both by presence and absence, and by selection and omission of different elements among the contesting memories. It lacks any devices that could help uncover the unforgetting. It is a testament to both the reluctance and the willingness to dig deeper into the tragedy. Even as it successfully planted that memory in public space, paradoxically it also formalized the partial silence—the huge realm of unforgetting that remains even after 1996.

中文译文：

十月六日纪念碑，是1996年纪念活动之后屠杀记忆所处的悖论状态的具体体现。一方面，它在公共空间中确实而稳固地确立了悲剧的记忆，标志着自20世纪90年代中期以来关于屠杀的公共记忆景观发生了变化。十月六日的记忆如今可以被听见，不再完全沉默。它也暗示着其他记忆的可能性：那些尚未被表达或承认、已经失去或被遗忘，或者仍处在‘无法遗忘’领域中的记忆。然而，纪念碑的设计与位置也以微妙的方式体现了哪些可说、哪些不可说的界限；既通过在场与缺席，也通过在相互竞争的记忆要素之间作出的选择与省略。它缺乏能够帮助揭开‘无法遗忘’状态的装置。它证明了人们既不愿、又愿意进一步深入这场悲剧。即便它成功地将记忆植入公共空间，悖论的是，它也把局部沉默正式固定下来——也就是1996年之后仍存在的广阔‘无法遗忘’领域。

[P045] 英文原文：

Figure 7. The October 6 monument at Thammasat University. © Fa Diaw Kan.

中文译文：

图7．法政大学的十月六日纪念碑。　Fa Diaw Kan。

[P046] 英文原文：

The conception of this monument began during the commemoration in 1996, but the process—brainstorming for ideas, selection of artists, design, fundraising, and construction—took years to finish. It was inaugurated on October 6, 2000.23 TU adopted the project as its own although no government money could be used for it. After struggling for several years, the funding for the monument got a boost after Puey passed away in 1999, prompting more donations from his admirers to complete the project.

中文译文：

纪念碑的构想始于1996年的纪念活动期间，但从集思广益、挑选艺术家、设计、筹款到施工，整个过程历经数年才完成。纪念碑于2000年10月6日揭幕。　　法政大学将该项目纳入自身事务，尽管不能为此动用政府资金。经过数年的困难，1999年贝·温帕功去世之后，他的仰慕者增加了捐款，纪念碑的资金问题才得到缓解，项目得以完成。

[P047] 英文原文：

Over the years, many aspects of the monument changed, including the concept and design. Having begun as a functional memorial building, it evolved into a stand-alone monument due to funding, costs, and shifting policy of the TU administration. It had to be placed inside TU because no other government agency would provide space, undoubtedly due to its sensitivity. TU insisted that the October 6 monument should be one in a series to mark the important political events in which the university has contributed to Thailand’s democratization, not a single monument to the massacre. Hence the plan for the Historic Sculpture Garden of TU and Democratic Struggles, beginning with its founding in 1934 as part of the 1932 revolution and ending with the October 6, 1976, massacre, separated by six monuments to other events.24 “The meandering stone path leading from one monument to another symbolizes a river of time. . . . From this approach, the October 6 monument . . . forms a dam blocking the flow of the symbolic river.”25

中文译文：

多年来，纪念碑的许多方面，包括理念与设计，都发生变化。它最初被设想为一座具有实用功能的纪念建筑，后来受筹资、成本和法政大学行政方针变化的影响，演变为一座独立的纪念碑。它不得不设在法政大学校园内，因为其他政府机构都不愿提供场地，这无疑与它的敏感性有关。校方坚持认为，十月六日纪念碑应属于一系列纪念大学对泰国民主化作出贡献的重大政治事件的纪念碑，而不是一座孤立的屠杀纪念碑。由此产生了‘法政大学与民主斗争历史雕塑园’的方案：从学校1934年作为1932年革命的一部分而创立开始，到1976年10月6日的屠杀结束，中间以另外六座纪念碑标识其他事件。

‘在纪念碑之间蜿蜒穿行的石径象征一条时间之河……从这个角度看，十月六日纪念碑……构成了一道阻挡象征性河流流动的水坝。’

[P048] 英文原文：

The brainstorming session was a public event, and the entire project involved almost a hundred artists. Two of them, senior artists who were themselves involved in political activism in the mid-1970s, were chosen to lead the entire project and were responsible for the October 6 monument. A private fund supported a trip enabling the two to learn from similar projects elsewhere. They chose to go to Poland and Russia.26 Between a realist, a semi-abstract, and a symbolic portrayal, they eventually chose the realistic one.27 In the words of the chief artist, Suraphol Panyawachira, partly in response to criticism of the unsubtle style and the unambiguous message of the monument,

中文译文：

集思广益会议向公众开放，整个项目共有近百名艺术家参与。其中两位资深艺术家在20世纪70年代中期曾亲身参与政治活动，最终被选为项目的总负责人，并负责十月六日纪念碑。私人基金资助他们赴外地考察类似项目，他们选择去波兰和俄罗斯。 在写实、半抽象和象征性表现三种方案之间，他们最终选择了写实。 总设计师苏拉蓬·班亚瓦奇拉（Surapho1 Panyawachira）这样解释自己的选择，这部分也是对纪念碑风格不够含蓄、信息过于明确的批评作出回应：

[P049] 英文原文：

[For October 6], a symbolic [monument] is dangerous. . . . I am worried about the different interpretations that might distort history. Many people tried to do so [for this case]. Dangerous. . . . Some other monuments [in the same series] are more symbolic. However, for this one, instead of allowing [people] to interpret its meaning, it should be a direct punch. . . . I want it to be quite disturbing, hoping that visitors of later generations would ask if it was really so horrifying, then question further. This is my intention.28

中文译文：

‘［就十月六日而言］，象征性［纪念碑］是危险的……我担心不同的解释可能会扭曲历史。很多人已经试图这样做［对于这件事］。很危险……［同一系列中的］其他一些纪念碑更具象征性。但对这一座而言，与其允许［人们］自行解释意义，不如直接给他们迎头一击……我希望它相当令人不安，希望后代参观者会问：事情真的有这么恐怖吗？然后继续追问。这就是我的用意。’

[P050] 英文原文：

“It must make the visitors feel shocked, unable to smile,” another artist adds.29

中文译文：

‘它必须让参观者感到震惊，笑不出来。’另一位艺术家补充说。

[P051] 英文原文：

Unfortunately, between 1996 and 2000, when the monument was designed and completed, information about the victims who died was still unclear. Many names inscribed on the back of the monument are misspelled or incorrect. One name was, according to police records, a goon who attacked TU that morning. Finally, even though the citation from Puey was part of the original design, the relief of Puey was not. The addition of his image was part of an agreement for a huge donation to the project after his death.30

中文译文：

遗憾的是，1996年至2000年纪念碑设计并完成期间，关于死难者的信息仍然不清楚。刻在纪念碑背面的许多姓名有拼写错误，或根本就不正确。按照警方记录，其中一个名字属于那个早晨袭击法政大学的暴徒。最后，尽管贝·温帕功的话从一开始就被纳入设计，他的浮雕形象却并不在原方案中。在他去世之后，项目获得一笔巨额捐款，增添他的肖像便是该捐款协议的一部分。

[P052] 英文原文：

Despite the determination of the artists to prevent interpretations of the monument other than its explicit and shocking message, I would argue that no artist can block multiple meanings. The bulky rock in its chosen style may shout loudly to a visitor, “October 6, 1976,” in an intimidating and shocking fashion as the artists intended. Despite that, ambivalence was unavoidable, not because the literal message—the date—is not clear enough, nor because the design and art are not immediate and loud enough, but because even such explicit and direct messages cannot prevent multiple meanings given the multiple and ambivalent memories of the massacre. The date is the least controversial, most neutral name for the incident precisely because it hides the contested memories and meanings behind it. The date is the only element that every memory of the massacre shares. Beyond that, anything goes. The shocking horror of the event is also an element that various memories of the massacre agree on. These elements of the memories fall within the allowable limits of public discourse since the 1996 commemoration. The monument therefore represents the public memory of the massacre quite well in that it speaks as much as is allowed. The other memories, however, remain behind the massive granite slab. The rock does not exorcise the specter. The ambivalence may not be apparent, but it is inherent. The monument is the embodiment or the permanent abode of the specter. Moreover, as public memory of the massacre moved closer to the moderate, such as Puey's, even the artists of the monument must have been informed and influenced by such views. The strong presence of Puey embodied in his words at the base of the monument have much to tell us about the memoryscape of the massacre since 1996.

中文译文：

尽管艺术家们决心阻止人们对纪念碑作出不同于其明确、震撼信息的解释，我仍认为没有艺术家能够阻止多重意义的产生。这块厚重巨石采用特定的风格，或许正如艺术家所期望的那样，以令人畏惧、震惊的方式向参观者高声宣告：‘1976年10月6日！’但矛盾心理仍不可避免。这不是因为文字信息——日期——不够清楚，也不是设计与艺术表达不够直接、强烈，而是因为屠杀的记忆本身多元而矛盾，即使如此明确直接的信息，也无法消除多种意义。日期之所以是这一事件最无争议、最中性的名称，恰恰因为它掩盖了隐藏在背后的相互竞争的记忆与意义。日期是所有屠杀记忆唯一共有的要素。除此之外，一切皆有可能。事件令人震惊的恐怖，也是不同屠杀记忆都认同的要素。自1996年纪念活动以来，这些记忆要素处于公共话语允许的界限之内。因此，这座纪念碑相当准确地体现了关于屠杀的公共记忆：它说出了获准说出的一切。然而，其他记忆仍藏在巨大的花岗岩石板背后。巨石并不能驱除幽灵。矛盾心理或许不显眼，但它内在于其中。纪念碑正是幽灵的化身，或者说它永久的居所。而且，随着关于屠杀的公共记忆逐渐接近贝·温帕功等人的温和观点，纪念碑的艺术家本身也必然受到这些观点的影响。贝·温帕功的话刻在纪念碑底座上，鲜明地体现了他的在场，向我们透露了许多1996年以来屠杀记忆景观的变化。

[P053] 英文原文：

Last but equally important, the location inside TU marks the contained public space in which the memories live on. The space outside the campus is probably too public and, as symbolically represented by Sanamluang, too connected to the Grand Palace. The noisy memories of the massacre are located literally on the fringe of the public space in which the monarchy's presence is still in command. The massacre is the noise on the edge of memory, a partial silence of the unforgetting.

中文译文：

最后但同样重要的是，纪念碑位于法政大学校园内，这也标志了这些记忆能够延续的公共空间受到限定。校园外的空间或许过于公共，而且正如皇家田广场所象征的那样，与大王宫联系过于紧密。屠杀那些喧嚣的记忆，在字面意义上被安置在王室仍然占据支配地位的公共空间边缘。屠杀是记忆边缘的噪声，是‘无法遗忘’状态中的局部沉默。

[P054] After the Commemoration

中文译文：纪念活动之后

[P055] 英文原文：

It was a painfully long time before the former radicals could honor their lost friends and acknowledge the pain their families had endured quietly since that Wednesday morning. “It took twenty years to prove that those who died were not enemies of the country,” a former leader remarked.31 Clearly, the commemorative movement has expanded the limits for public discourse of the massacre considerably. If a monument is taken as a milestone of memory, then the commemorative movement in 1995 and 1996 had a huge impact on the memoryscape of the 1976 massacre and, as it turned out, on the 1973 uprising as well.

中文译文：

前激进分子经历了痛苦而漫长的岁月，才得以纪念失去的朋友，并承认他们的家人自那个星期三早晨以来默默承受的痛苦。一位前领导人说：‘我们用了二十年才证明，死去的人不是国家的敌人。’ 显然，纪念运动大幅拓宽了围绕屠杀进行公共讨论的界限。如果把一座纪念碑视为记忆的里程碑，那么1995年至1996年的纪念运动不仅极大地改变了1976年屠杀的记忆景观，而且事实证明也改变了人们对1973年起义的记忆。

[P056] 英文原文：

The memorial of the October 1973 uprising that had faced so many obstacles over the years finally materialized after the 1996 commemoration helped rehabilitate the 1973–1976 student movement. In 1998, a new agreement was announced. The story behind this success was the personal connection between the leader of the 1973 uprising, Thirayuth Boonmi, and the former prime minister, Anand Punyarachun, who personally negotiated with the director of the Crown Property Bureau. Nevertheless, I would argue, the success was owed in part to the 1995–1996 commemorative movement. This monument, however, was for the martyrs of October 1973 only. The events and names of the dead in the 1976 massacre could not be included. In the view of many of my friends from that generation, it was the first step toward a more formal recognition of the massacre. In my view, however, that may not be the case. The monument for October 1973 is possible, I would argue, partly because of the clear exclusion of the 1976 massacre from the 1973 memorial project.

中文译文：

1973年十月起义的纪念碑多年来遇到重重障碍，直到1996年纪念活动帮助恢复了1973—1976年学生运动的名誉后，才终于得以建成。1998年，一项新协议得到公布。这次成功背后的故事，是1973年起义领导人提拉育·汶米（Thirayuth Boonmi）与前总理阿南·班雅拉春（Anand Punyarachun）之间的私人关系；后者亲自同王室财产局局长谈判。然而，我认为，这一成功也部分归功于1995—1996年的纪念运动。不过，这座纪念碑只纪念1973年十月的烈士。1976年屠杀的事件和死者姓名都不能列入。许多那一代朋友认为，这朝着更正式承认屠杀迈出了第一步。但我不一定同意。我认为，1973年十月纪念碑之所以能够建成，部分原因恰恰是1973年纪念项目明确排除了1976年屠杀。

[P057] 英文原文：

The October 14 Martyrs was unveiled in 2001 with huge celebration and fanfare. It is a building that houses a museum of the 1973 uprising and meeting rooms for political activities. At its heart is the stupa-shaped monument, fourteen meters tall and copper colored. The front of the base is a plaque inscribed “October 14, 1973, People’s Democracy” and the names of the seventy-two people who died in the uprising.32 Maurizio Peleggi astutely observes that the monuments of the two Octobers are supposed to be related given the history of the two events. But they are in fact quite different. The monument to the uprising is prospective; that of the massacre is retrospective. The Buddhist symbolism of the former “encourage(s) reflective remembrance which is the functional discharge of painful memories and the extinction of psychic suffering,” in contrast with the emotional remembrance of the 1976 monument, which implies the ongoing pain and suffering.33 The distinction between the two Octobers is amplified. One is officially recognized by the state, the other is more dangerous and must be kept within limits.

中文译文：

‘十月十四日烈士纪念碑’于2001年在盛大的庆典与欢呼中揭幕。它是一座建筑，内部设有1973年起义博物馆以及供政治活动使用的会议室。其核心是一座佛塔形纪念碑，高十四米，呈铜色。基座正面的铭牌刻着‘1973年10月14日，人民民主’以及七十二位起义死难者的姓名。　　毛里齐奥·佩莱吉（Maurizio Peleggi）敏锐地指出，考虑到两次十月事件的历史联系，人们本以为两座纪念碑应该彼此相关，但事实上它们截然不同。起义纪念碑面向未来，屠杀纪念碑则回望过去。前者的佛教象征‘鼓励反思性的追忆，其功能是宣泄痛苦记忆、消除心理苦难’；相较之下，1976年纪念碑表现的是情感性的追忆，意味着痛苦与苦难仍在延续。　　两个‘十月’之间的差别由此被进一步放大：一个得到国家的正式承认，另一个则更为危险，必须受到限制。

[P058] 英文原文：

Despite the somewhat limited recognition of the history of the October uprising, it is not without ambivalence and “its place in history still provokes uneasiness.”34 In most school textbooks, October 1973 receives only passing attention, if it is mentioned. Controversies over former dictators always revive the call to include the event in history textbooks. For example, in early 1997, the government restored the status, and thereby the pensions and benefits, of one dictator who had gone into exile in 1973. The government rescinded its decision after strong protests from the public but took no action on the textbook issue.35 In early 1999, a different administration made a similar mistake, conferring a highly prestigious award on Thanom. It was so controversial that it almost brought down the government.36 After this controversy, the government agreed to allow the story of the 1973 uprising in school textbooks but made it clear that the 1976 massacre and the 1992 uprising, which were still fresh at the time, were not under consideration.37 Controversies accompanied the process from beginning to end, concerning who should be assigned to write, how the incident should be remembered, and how it would be written. To avoid offending the different sides, the finished draft omitted the necessary elements of a good narrative, including the names of key historical figures and several important but disputed details. Critical interpretations, and thus the meanings of the event, were also absent. As the author admitted, it was not a history but an almanac.38 The draft was mired in controversy for more than a year and failed to get approval from the scholars who reviewed it. Eventually, in early 2001, the project was dropped.39

中文译文：

尽管十月起义的历史在一定程度上得到认可，但这种认可并非没有矛盾，‘它在历史上的位置仍使人不安’。　　在多数学校教科书中，1973年十月即使被提及，也只是寥寥数语。每当有关前独裁者的争议爆发，要求将这场事件纳入历史教科书的呼声便重新出现。例如，1997年初，政府恢复了一位

1973年流亡独裁者的身份，随之恢复了其养老金及福利待遇。公众强烈抗议后，政府撤销了决定，却没有在教科书问题上采取行动。　　1999年初，另一届政府犯下类似错误，向他依授予极其崇高的奖项。争议之大，几乎导致政府垮台。　　这场争议之后，政府同意允许1973年起义的故事进入学校教科书，但明确表示当时仍然近在眼前的1976年屠杀和1992年起义不在考虑之列。　　从头到尾，整个过程都伴随着争议：由谁负责撰写、事件应如何被记忆、应如何书写。为了避免冒犯不同立场的人，完成的草稿省略了良好历史叙事所必需的要素，包括关键历史人物的姓名以及几项重要而有争议的细节。批判性解释以及事件的意义也都不见了。正如作者自己承认，这不是历史，而是一份年鉴。草稿陷入争议一年多，未能得到审阅学者的批准。最终，2001年初，项目被取消了。

[P059] 英文原文：

No effort was made to include an account of the October 6 massacre in school textbooks. If the October uprising was recognized as a major step toward democracy and a historic event that most Thai people supported, the October massacre was neither. Instead, it was a reminder that Thailand was not as peaceful or tolerant as generally believed, and that Thai people could also commit atrocities. It was a haunting history. Even after the breakthrough in 1996, the October massacre remained a more uncomfortable episode of history to many than the uprising. The question whether to commemorate the two October events together or separately, for example, was raised again and again over the years. It made allies of people with different aims. The together camp consisted of those trying to give a stronger presence to the massacre and those trying to deradicalize the past. Integrating the two Octobers in the narrative of the commemoration would achieve both purposes. In the separate camp were those radicals who did not want to erase the strong distinction between the two events, along with the nonradicals who were afraid that the massacre might “contaminate” the October uprising by making it too radical. Keeping the narratives of the two Octobers separate would achieve both purposes.

中文译文：

没有人尝试将十月六日屠杀写进学校教科书。如果说十月起义被视为走向民主的重要一步、受到多数泰国人支持的历史事件，那么十月屠杀两者皆非。相反，它提醒人们，泰国并不像通常想象的那样和平或宽容，泰国人也可能实施暴行。这是一段挥之不去、如幽灵般困扰人们的历史。即使1996年出现突破，对许多人来说，十月屠杀仍比起义更难面对。比如，究竟应该共同还是分别纪念两个‘十月’，多年来一再成为争论问题。不同目的的人因此成为盟友。主张一起纪念的一方，既有希望强化屠杀存在感的人，也有试图淡化过去激进色彩的人。把两个十月融入同一纪念叙事，可以同时实现两种目的。主张分别纪念的一方，既有不愿抹除两起事件强烈差异的激进分子，也有担心屠杀会因过于激进而‘污染’十月起义的非激进人士。把两个十月的叙事分开，同样可以同时实现这两种目的。

[P060] 英文原文：

During and after the commemorative year, memoirs of former radicals abounded, especially of their jungle years, showing their growing comfort with telling the stories of their radical past openly in public. One of them, by a well-known writer, Sila Khomchai, included hilarious stories about his jungle experiences as a member of a revolutionary musical group.40 To be able to laugh at themselves and to recall their difficult years from such an ironic and playful perspective was remarkable. This memoir is still one of a kind. It does not oppose the radical views but subverts them. Another remarkable one, published nearly twenty years later, tells the story of day-to-day living as a young revolutionary, which was full of hardship, scarcity, and the sadness of loss, but also fun, romantic love and heartbreak, and everyday irritations, such as a silly dispute over salted fish. Clearly, these former radicals did not deny or forget their radical past. It is easy to see how proud and painful they still are. But their perspective on their past was anything but radical. As one of them put it, “as time went by, those youths grew up, matured, and gained experience. Thus, they could look back on their past with understanding, and could laugh at their naiveté.”41 These memoirs are evidence that the public had provided these former radicals with the space that allowed them to be themselves and their memories to come out openly.

中文译文：

在纪念年期间及之后，前激进分子的回忆录大量涌现，尤其是关于他们丛林岁月的作品，表明他们越来越能够自在地公开讲述自己的激进过去。其中一本出自知名作家西拉·孔猜（Sila Khomchai）之手，收录了他作为革命音乐团成员在丛林中经历的滑稽故事。　　能够嘲笑自己，并以如此反讽而戏谑的视角回顾艰难岁月，实在不同寻常。这部回忆录至今独树一帜。它并不反对激进观点，却颠覆了这些观点。另一本同样引人注目的回忆录近二十年后才出版，讲述了一位年轻革命者的日常生活：其中充满艰辛、匮乏和失去的悲伤，也有乐趣、浪漫爱情、心碎，以及诸如因腌鱼发生的愚蠢争执等日常烦恼。显然，这些前激进分子没有否认或忘记自己的激进过去。很容易看出，他们至今仍既自豪又痛苦。但他们回顾过去的视角，绝称不上激进。正如其中一人所说：‘随着时间流逝，那些年轻人成长、成熟，积累了经验。因此，他们能够带着理解回望过去，也能够嘲笑当年的天真。’　　这些回忆录证明，公共领域已为前激进分子提供了空间，使他们能够做自己、公开表达自己的记忆。

[P061] 英文原文：

After the 1996 commemoration, the serious searches for fallen communist comrades in jungles began and continued for some years. Altogether, they recovered the bones of several hundred people. These former radicals at various CPT bases around the country organized commemorations and cremations for their fallen comrades, providing the honor and recognition due to them and their families. Then, at each base, a monument was erected, usually in the form of a commemorative stupa with an inscription of the names of the fallen fighters either on the stupa or a nearby plaque. At the one in Nongbua Lamphu I visited, small urns, each filled with the remains of an individual fighter, were placed in an orderly way on the shelf with names and sometimes pictures of the dead. At another memorial, a poem celebrating the revolutionary spirit and the fallen comrades was engraved on the wall, with a red-star flag and other memorabilia from the failed revolutionary wars. The stupa, which looks like a Khmerstyle pagoda, is in fact modeled after an M-16 bullet. Any political significance of the design is left to the visitor’s imagination. By 2016, fifteen monuments had been erected to fallen revolutionary militias. Except for the M-16 bullet stupa, all were created after the 1995–1996 commemorative movement.42 This is more evidence that the 1996 commemoration did not try to erase the history of Thai radicalism, as some had feared, and that the former radicals did not try to deradicalize their pasts. Looking at the past from the perspective of later decades, they instead saw radicalism as a youthful idealistic part of their lives.

中文译文：

1996年纪念活动之后，人们开始认真在丛林中寻找牺牲的共产主义同志，工作持续了数年，总共寻回了数百人的遗骨。全国各地不同泰共基地的前激进分子组织纪念与火葬仪式，给予牺牲同志及其家人应有的荣誉与承认。随后，每个基地都建立一座纪念碑，通常是一座纪念佛塔，塔身或附近的碑牌上刻着阵亡战士的姓名。我曾到访农磨兰普（Nongbua Lamphu）的一座纪念碑，那里一个个装有个人遗骨的小瓮整齐地摆在架上，旁边有名字，有时还配着死者照片。另一处纪念设施的墙上刻着歌颂革命精神与牺牲同志的诗，陈列着红星旗及失败革命战争的其他纪念物。那座看起来像高棉风格佛塔的建筑，实际上模仿的是一颗M-16子弹。设计有何政治意义，留给参观者自行想象。到2016年，已有十五座纪念牺牲革命民兵的纪念碑建成。除了那座M-16子弹佛塔，其他全部在1995—1996年纪念运动之后才出现。　　这进一步证明，1996年的纪念活动并没有像一些人担心的那样，试图抹除泰国激进主义的历史，前激进分子也没有试图去除自己过去的激进色彩。只是从数十年后回望，他们把激进主义看作自己人生中年轻而理想主义的一部分。

[P062] 英文原文：

Since 1996, October 6 has been noisy and loud, but it stays within the limits. It is fine now to say that a massacre of students occurred on that day. It is fine now to talk about the brutality and extreme violence. Anything beyond that—who did it or why—is out of bounds and thus should remain in the realm of silence. Despite the uneasiness, the annual commemoration of the massacre has become a regular event that attracts reasonable attention from the media and the public. The unforgetting after 1996 is in an ongoing state of partial or semisilence. The noisy edge and the realm of silence are juxtaposed. This memory condition is not always opposed to remembering. Instead, it yields a peculiar kind of memory, which is the subject of the next two chapters.

中文译文：

1996年以来，十月六日的记忆变得喧闹而响亮，但仍处在界限之内。如今说那天发生了对学生的屠杀，是可以接受的；谈论残酷和极端暴力，也可以接受。但在此之外——是谁干的、为什么干——就超出了界限，因此应留在沉默领域。尽管仍有不安，每年对屠杀的纪念已经成为常规活动，并得到媒体和公众适度的关注。1996年之后的‘无法遗忘’，始终处于局部或半沉默的持续状态。喧闹的边缘与沉默的领域彼此并置。这种记忆状态并不总是与记忆对立。相反，它产生了一种特殊的记忆形式，下一两章将以此为主题。