[P001] 英文原文：

Thus far, we have seen that silence is not a symptom of forgetting but one of the unforgetting, the inarticulate or unvoiced memory and the liminal state at the edge of memory. This chapter takes us one step further to understand the moments when silence represents efforts against forgetting. It also contends with another problematic assumption that political silence, or silence following an atrocity, is the result of suppression, directly or indirectly, politically and socially, or psychologically. Silence is usually taken as a negative, a sign of suppression—in other words, the result of being silenced. Such an assumption may not be wrong, but it is not necessarily right, either. Indeed, voluntary silence is not uncommon.

中文译文：

到目前为止，我们已经看到，沉默不是遗忘的征兆，而是‘无法遗忘’（unforgetting）的一种表现，是无法言说或没有发声的记忆，也是记忆边缘的一种临界状态。本章将进一步考察，沉默有时如何代表着抵抗遗忘的努力。本章还质疑另一个有问题的假设：政治沉默或暴行之后的沉默，必然是直接或间接的政治、社会或心理压制的结果。人们通常把沉默视为消极的东西、压制的信号，换言之，是被迫噤声的结果。这种假设未必错误，但也未必总是正确。事实上，自愿的沉默并不少见。

[P002] 英文原文：

This chapter offers two cases that illustrate purposeful silence used to cope with the painful past. In the first, a father searches for his son whose death on October 6, 1976, was unconfirmed and the whereabouts of his body unknown for more than twenty years. The father kept a detailed chronicle of his unsuccessful search for his son. The chronicle had no ending, however. It went silent while the search continued. Why? This conundrum prompted me to search for the truth about his son’s death and the whereabouts of his body. The answers I found led to another heartbreaking moment that reminds us how silence can be full of memory and hope, but how fragile this silence can be. The second case is about a Buddhist approach to a past atrocity, and how a deep contemplation of its cause produces silence as a way to cope with the painful past. Silence is a virtuous act. The chapter ends with my brief reflections on the long silence of Dr. Puey Ungphakorn, the rector of Thammasat University, after the massacre.

中文译文：

本章通过两个案例，说明人们如何有意识地借助沉默应对痛苦的过去。第一个案例是一位父亲寻找儿子的故事。儿子是否在1976年10月6日遇害无法确定，遗体的下落更是二十多年不明。这位父亲详细记录了自己寻找儿子而无结果的历程。然而，记录没有结尾。寻找还在继续，记录却沉默了。为什么？这个谜团促使我追寻其儿子的死因和遗体去向。我找到的答案通向另一个令人心碎的时刻，提醒我们沉默如何能够充满记忆与希望，但它又是多么脆弱。第二个案例涉及佛教对过去暴行的应对方式：对暴行原因的深入思考如何产生沉默，并成为面对痛苦过去的途径。在这里，沉默是一种德行。本章最后简短反思法政大学校长贝·温帕功博士（Dr. Puey Ungphakorn）在屠杀之后长时间的沉默。

[P003] A Father’s Silence for Memory and Hope

中文译文：一位父亲为了记忆与希望而保持的沉默

[P004] 英文原文：

Jinda and Lim Thongsin lived in a small town in Surat Thani Province, about seven hundred kilometers south of Bangkok, which was about twelve to thirteen hours by train at the time (figure 8). Jinda was a school teacher, Lim an orchard farmer. Their eldest son, Jaruphong, had been missing since the day of the massacre, and they began the search for him immediately. Jinda wrote a memoir, a chronicle of his search. He kept it to himself for twenty years before friends of his son made it public at the commemoration of the massacre in 1996.1

中文译文：

金达（Jinda）和林（Lim）·通辛住在素叻他尼府的一座小镇，位于曼谷以南约七百公里。当时乘火车需要十二至十三小时（图8）。金达是学校教师，林经营果园。他们的长子乍鲁蓬（Jaruphong）自屠杀当天起失踪，夫妻俩立即开始寻找。金达写了一部回忆录，记录寻子的过程。二十年来他一直把它留在自己手中，直到1996年屠杀纪念活动时，儿子的朋友才将其公之于众。

[P005] 英文原文：

Jinda’s memoir deserves the lengthy excerpts included here for many reasons. It tells us about the experiences of an ordinary parent who traveled long distances, leaving his wife and other children at home, to search for his missing son under the difficult and confusing conditions immediately after the massacre. No one knew for certain where to find information about the victims. Even the authorities knew little. The search was frantic and chaotic. The memoir tells us about public sentiments at the time—the official who treated the arrested students and their relatives as enemies, the ordinary people who acted out of kindness and concern no matter what they thought about the radical students, the friends of the victims who shared tears and concerns, and more. The memoir tells us not only much about Jinda but also about many other parents in the same situation, whether their children lost their lives, were arrested, or simply did not return home after the massacre. The last but most important reason for me is that Jaruphong was a friend of mine who sacrificed his life trying to protect others.

中文译文：

金达的回忆录值得在这里长篇引用，原因有很多。它讲述了一位普通父亲在屠杀刚发生后困难、混乱的情况下，离开妻子和其他孩子，长途跋涉寻找失踪儿子的经历。没有人知道究竟该到哪里寻找受害者的信息，即使当局也所知甚少。整个寻找过程焦急而混乱。回忆录还展现了当时公众的感受：把被捕学生及亲属当作敌人的官员、不论如何看待激进学生仍出于善意和关切给予帮助的普通人、共同流泪并担忧的受害者朋友，等等。这部回忆录不仅让我们了解金达，还让我们看到许多处于类似境地的父母：他们的孩子有的死了，有的被捕，有的在屠杀后再也没有回家。对我来说，最后也最重要的原因是：乍鲁蓬是我的朋友，他为了保护他人而牺牲了生命。

[P006] 英文原文：

“In Search for My Son: a Father’s Memoir,” by Jinda Thongsin

中文译文：

《寻找我的儿子：一位父亲的回忆录》，金达·通辛著

[P007] 英文原文：

The memoir begins with background information about the family. Jinda and Lim had five children. In 1976, one was in kindergarten, three in local grade schools, and the eldest son Jaruphong. Jaruphong was the first in the family to go to college.

中文译文：

回忆录开篇介绍家庭背景。金达和林有五个孩子。1976年，一个在幼儿园，三个在当地小学，另一个便是长子乍鲁蓬。乍鲁蓬是家中第一个上大学的人。

[P008] 英文原文：

In that year [Jinda wrote], an unforeseeable event took place. It was a tragedy, incomparable to any other, that brought grief to my entire family. It was extremely painful, so unbearable that it can be said that I, the father, and Lim, the mother, of those children, have already died even though we are still breathing. And we will remain dead until what we lost is returned to us.

中文译文：

‘那一年，［金达写道］发生了一件无法预见的事。那是一场无可比拟的悲剧，使我全家陷入悲痛。痛苦极其深重，难以忍受；可以说，我这个父亲，以及孩子们的母亲林，虽然还在呼吸，却早已死去。只有等失去的东西回到我们身边，我们才可能不再是死人。’

[P009] 英文原文：

After learning about the tragedy on October 6, Jinda and Lim were distraught. Jinda took a train to Bangkok as soon as he could. “On that train, I met some fellows in a similar situation. . . . We looked at each other, speechless, as we all were indescribably sad and concerned.” Arriving in Bangkok in the early morning of October 8, he rushed to his son’s dormitory.

中文译文：

得知10月6日的悲剧后，金达和林悲痛欲绝。金达尽快乘火车赶往曼谷。‘火车上，我遇见了几个与我处境相似的人……我们相互看着，说不出话，因为每个人都悲伤担忧到了无法形容的程度。’ 10月8日清晨抵达曼谷，他急忙赶往儿子的宿舍。

[P011] 英文原文：

The atmosphere at the dorm was quite different from that during my previous visits when my son first began staying there two years before. This time, everybody just looked at each other in silence. No chitchat. Not even a noise from a radio. I sensed a calamity. I looked up at the windows of his room. They were shut. Perhaps he was still in bed. I rushed to his room but found the door securely locked from the outside. I peeked inside. He was not there, not even a trace. My heart sank, as if it had left my body. My knees trembled. As I tried to walk down the stairs, I met a young boy who lived a few doors down from my son. I told him I had come to see my son, Jaruphong. Suddenly he burst into tears, telling me that Jaruphong had not returned to the dorm since October 5, the day before the event. As his voice entered my ears, I could not hear anything else.

中文译文：

‘宿舍里的气氛与两年前儿子刚住进来、我以前来探望时很不一样。这次，所有人只是默默地相互望着。没有闲聊，连收音机的声音都听不到。我感到出了大事。我抬头看儿子房间的窗户，窗子关着。也许他还在床上。我冲向房间，却发现门从外面锁得紧紧的。我向里面窥看。他不在那里，连一点踪迹都没有。我的心猛然往下沉，仿佛脱离了身体。膝盖直发抖。我努力下楼时遇见一个小男孩，他住在离儿子房间几扇门远的地方。我告诉他我是来找儿子乍鲁蓬的。他突然哭了起来，告诉我自10月5日、事件发生前一天以来，乍鲁蓬就没有回过宿舍。他的话传进我耳里时，我再也听不到其他任何声音。’

[P012] 英文原文：

Jinda then met the owner of the dormitory, who tried to console him. Jinda was baffled: where should he start to search for his son? TU was shut down. “I bought every newspaper, reading every bit of news about injured students at various hospitals, praying quietly to not find Jaruphong’s name. The dorm’s owner told me that he had his boys going to various hospitals, but Jaruphong’s name was not among the injured students.” Following the advice of the owner that Jaruphong might be among those students who had been arrested and detained in various places, Jinda then rushed to the police station closest to TU to find the list of all those who had been arrested. The station was crowded with parents who looked terrified. He found the name of a nephew, Jang, who had been detained at the police school outside Bangkok. But Jaruphong’s name was not among those arrested. Jinda then went back to his son’s dorm, hoping that he might have left a note or some traces in his room.

中文译文：

金达随后见到宿舍主人，对方试着安慰他。金达不知所措：应该从哪里开始寻找儿子？法政大学已经关闭。‘我把所有报纸都买了下来，逐字读各家医院收治受伤学生的消息，一面默默祈祷不要看到乍鲁蓬的名字。宿舍主人告诉我，他已派自己的人去了多家医院，但受伤学生的名单里没有乍鲁蓬。’房东建议乍鲁蓬可能在被捕并分散关押的学生之中，金达于是冲往距离法政大学最近的警察局，查看所有被捕者的名单。警局里挤满神情惊恐的父母。他找到外甥占（Jang）的名字，占被关押在曼谷郊外的警察学校。然而，乍鲁蓬不在被捕者之列。金达又返回儿子宿舍，希望他可能在房间里留下字条或其他线索。

[P013] 英文原文：

I went into the room. His used clothes were hung on a bar, but the bed was covered neatly. On the desk, books, pens and stationery were still there. . . . There was an envelope addressed to me, but nothing inside. Many documents were still in the tote bag he always carried. I delved into every piece of paper, but no trace. On a notebook nearby, he had jotted a passage without a date. I do not know when he wrote it, but it perfectly fit what had just happened. He had written, “They mercilessly sprayed bullets at us, who fought for democracy and for the country, till we fell chaotically. Our friends’ blood that soaked the soil won’t be wasted. Comrades, we who are still alive will take revenge for you!” At that point, Jinda thought that Jaruphong might have returned to his place to gather his necessary belongings, then escaped without letting anyone know. Jinda kept the note to himself, then went to consult with Lim’s nephew, who was a navy officer (referred to as Brother in the memoir). While listening to Brother about what happened in Thammasat, Jinda thought about Lim and recorded it in the memoir:

中文译文：

‘我走进房间。他穿过的衣服还挂在衣杆上，床却铺得整整齐齐。书桌上的书、钢笔和文具都还在……有一个写着我的名字的信封，但里面空无一物。他平时背的手提包里还放着许多文件。我翻遍每张纸，却没有找到踪迹。旁边的一本笔记本上，他写下一段没有日期的话。我不知道是什么时候写的，但它恰好契合刚刚发生的事情：“他们毫不留情地向为民主和国家而奋斗的我们倾泻子弹，把我们打得纷纷倒下。朋友们的鲜血浸透土地，但不会白流。同志们，我们这些活着的人将为你们复仇！”’此时金达猜想，乍鲁蓬也许回来收拾过必需品，然后没有告诉任何人便逃走了。他把那段笔记留在心里，随后找林的一位在海军任职的外甥商量（回忆录称其为‘哥哥’，Brother）。听哥哥讲述法政大学发生的事时，金达想到林，并在回忆录中写道：

[P014] 英文原文：

She must be even more anxious and agonized than I am because Jaruphong was our first child, the one she loves most and the one whom she was so proud of for becoming a college student. When this unexpected event happened, it was as if her heart and soul were wrenched away.

中文译文：

‘她一定比我更加焦虑和痛苦，因为乍鲁蓬是我们的第一个孩子，是她最疼爱的孩子，也是因为上了大学而令她最骄傲的孩子。这场意外发生时，仿佛有人把她的心与灵魂都生生扯走了。’

[P015] 英文原文：

Staying at Brother’s house, Jinda got so drunk that he could not remember anything about that evening. The next morning, Jinda and Brother drove to visit Jang, his nephew at the detention center outside Bangkok, hoping that he knew something about Jaruphong. For several hours, Jinda stood out in the sun in the long line of parents waiting to see their children, enduring verbal abuse from several police officers. One of them said, “You parents of terrorists didn’t teach your kids well. You deserve this!” Later, Jinda was told by another police officer that it would be the end of the day before it was his turn to visit Jang. He should come back another day.

中文译文：

住在哥哥家时，金达喝得烂醉，完全不记得那晚发生了什么。次日早晨，他和哥哥驱车前往曼谷郊外的拘留中心探望外甥占，希望占知道乍鲁蓬的消息。金达在太阳下站了几个小时，与等待探望孩子的父母们一起排长队，还遭到几名警察辱骂。其中一人说：‘你们这些恐怖分子的父母没有教好孩子，活该受这样的罪！’后来，另一名警察告诉金达，等排到他去探望占，恐怕已经是当天结束的时候了，应该改天再来。

[P016] 英文原文：

Jinda left Bangkok for home that evening. When he arrived the next day, he wrote in the memoir, “my children were waiting with their mother. When I said that I had not found Jaruphong yet, all of them cried. . . . Mother told the four children not to behave like their brother.” Jang’s parents visited Jinda, consulting with him about how to get Jang bailed out. They put together cash and other assets as collateral. Jinda went back to Bangkok and straight to Jaruphong’s dormitory, but there was no news. Then, to get Jang bailed out, he went from one police station to another, but could not get it done that day because he had to go to court. At court the next day, he learned that the land titles he had collected as collateral were not valid. Jinda then went to visit Jang again. Fortunately, this time he got the chance to talk to his nephew for five minutes.

中文译文：

当天傍晚，金达离开曼谷回家。次日到家后，他在回忆录里写道：‘我的孩子们和他们母亲一起等着我。我说还没有找到乍鲁蓬，他们全哭了……母亲告诉另外四个孩子，不要学他们哥哥那样行事。’占的父母登门拜访金达，向他请教怎样把占保释出来。他们凑齐现金和其他财产作为担保。金达再次前往曼谷，先直接到乍鲁蓬宿舍，却仍没有消息。随后为保释占，他从一个警察局跑到另一个警察局，但当天没能办成，因为还得上法庭。次日在法庭上，他得知作为担保而筹集的土地所有权证书无效。金达于是再次前去探望占。幸运的是，这次终于有机会和外甥谈上五分钟。

[P017] 英文原文：

The first thing Jinda asked Jang was about Jaruphong. Jang had encountered Jaruphong in the middle of the chaos, Jinda's memoir reported. Shortly after telling Jang to be careful, Jaruphong ran off. Suddenly another round of fire hit several students. Although Jang did not clearly see whether Jaruphong was among them, a female student he did not know screamed, "Jaruphong got shot dead." Jang recounted all of this to Jinda. "My heart almost stopped," Jinda wrote.

中文译文：

金达问占的第一件事就是乍鲁蓬的情况。据回忆录记载，占曾在混乱中遇见乍鲁蓬。乍鲁蓬叮嘱占小心，随后便跑开了。突然又一轮枪火击中几名学生。占并没有清楚看见乍鲁蓬是否在其中，但一位他不认识的女学生尖叫：‘乍鲁蓬中枪死了！’占把这些都告诉了金达。‘我的心几乎停止跳动。’金达写道。

[P018] 英文原文：

The collaterals Jinda brought to bail out Jang were denied by the court again the next day. On the street outside the court, which was on the other side of Sanamluang opposite TU, Jinda saw people still gathered around the spot where bodies had been burned on October 6. Distressed and speechless, he glanced over at TU, remembering the times he had visited it when Jaruphong was there. Jinda wrote, "it is as if Thammasat was telling me that it was barely alive and could hardly stand after taking all those bullets." Without any hope and not knowing what else to do, Jinda returned home.

中文译文：

次日，金达为保释占提供的担保再次遭法院拒绝。法院外的街道位于皇家田广场另一侧、正对法政大学。金达看到人们仍聚在10月6日焚烧尸体的地方。他痛苦得说不出话，朝法政大学望了一眼，想起乍鲁蓬在校时自己几次来访的情景。金达写道：‘仿佛法政大学在告诉我，它挨了那么多子弹，如今只剩一口气，几乎站不起来。’看不到希望，也不知还能做什么，金达回了家。

[P019] 英文原文：

At home, Jinda met a district officer who told him that “my son had returned to Surat [Thani]. Military intelligence learned that five to ten students fled to the jungle [at a nearby district to join the communist guerillas] including Jaruphong Thongsin—my son.” Jinda expressed doubt. The district officer backed up his words, saying that he could show evidence from military intelligence. Jinda was delighted with the exciting news, told his family, and renewed the search for his son. He went to the area mentioned by the officer. He met a former friend of Jaruphong who was a local soldier there, who told Jinda that he had seen Jaruphong a few days earlier walking in the market with some student friends. He knew for certain that it was Jaruphong, although he did not approach him because he, a soldier, might frighten Jaruphong and his friends. Jinda asked a relative who lived in that district to help find out more information. Two days later, this relative reported that it was not clear where Jaruphong was. The relative learned only that many students had joined the communists in the mountainous jungles near his hometown.

中文译文：

回到家中，金达遇见一位区长，对方告诉他：‘我儿子回素叻［他尼］了。军事情报得知，有五到十名学生逃进了［附近一个地区的］丛林［加入共产主义游击队］，其中包括乍鲁蓬·通辛——我的儿子。’金达表示怀疑。区长进一步保证，可以给他看军事情报部门的证据。金达为这条令人激动的消息欣喜不已，告诉家人，并重新开始寻找。他去了区长提到的地方，见到一位乍鲁蓬的旧友，后者此时在那里当兵。那人说几天前见到乍鲁蓬和几名学生朋友一起走在市场里。他确信那就是乍鲁蓬，却没有上前打招呼，因为自己是军人，可能会吓到乍鲁蓬及朋友。金达请当地一名亲戚帮助打听。两天后，亲戚说仍不清楚乍鲁蓬在哪儿，只得知许多学生已经在家乡附近的山区丛林里加入了共产党人。

[P020] 英文原文：

Three days later, Jinda learned that the police had stopped a mining truck at a district near his home town for transporting students from the train station into the hills. In those days, attacks by the communists on government forces had intensified and the number of casualties increased, especially in districts in Surat Thani. An additional three military posts with more weapons and cannons were set up in Jinda’s hometown. The psychological units were everywhere but the communist attacks did not subside. For months afterward, whenever anyone brought news about Jaruphong, Lim would question them extensively. If anyone said that they had seen Jaruphong anywhere, no matter where it was or how dangerous the area, Jinda and Lim would go.

中文译文：

三天后，金达听说警方在家乡附近一个区拦下一辆矿用卡车，车上正把一些学生从火车站送往山区。当时共产党人对政府军的袭击日益猛烈，伤亡增加，特别是在素叻他尼的几个地区。金达的家乡增设了三个军事哨所，配备更多武器和火炮。心理战单位无处不在，但共产主义者的袭击并未平息。此后数月，每当有人带来乍鲁蓬的消息，林都会仔细追问。只要有人声称在某地见过乍鲁蓬，无论地点在哪里、当地有多危险，金达和林都会赶去。

[P021] 英文原文：

A few months passed. Jaruphong’s siblings stopped doing well at school. They clearly missed their brother. “Whenever they mentioned him, it was like a needle pierced through my heart . . . my grief was deep inside, indescribable in words. I felt I would weep in my heart for the rest of my life,” Jinda wrote. Coming to terms with the fact that Jaruphong would not return to school, that they would not see him graduate from college, Jinda went to Bangkok to collect his son’s belongings and to pay the overdue rent.

中文译文：

又过了几个月，乍鲁蓬的弟妹们在学校的成绩开始下滑。他们显然思念哥哥。‘每次他们提起他，都像一根针扎进我的心……悲伤深藏在心里，无法用言语形容。我觉得余生都会在心里流泪。’金达写道。意识到乍鲁蓬不会再返校、他们也看不到儿子大学毕业了，金达前往曼谷收拾儿子的遗物，并补交拖欠的房租。

[P022] 英文原文：

We packed up everything, including old shoes, eyeglasses, bedding. . . . We put them neatly in boxes, not because we wanted to save them for our use, but because the things he had used reminded us of him. We wanted to keep his belongings for the day we might meet him again. If it never happens, they are all we have left of him.

中文译文：

‘我们把一切东西都收拾起来，包括旧鞋、眼镜、寝具……整齐地装进箱子，并不是因为我们想拿来用，而是因为他使用过的东西会让我们想起他。我们想把他的东西保存到有一天可能再次相见之时。如果永远无法相见，这些便是他留给我们的全部。’

[P023] 英文原文：

Jinda returned home after he finished packing up. “Everything in Bangkok hurts me,” he wrote. Lim washed her son’s clothes, folded them neatly, and put them in a bag. She did not let the other children use them because she believed that her son would surely return one day.

中文译文：

打包完毕后，金达回了家。‘曼谷的一切都让我痛苦。’他写道。林把儿子的衣服洗净、叠齐，装进袋子。她不准其他孩子穿，因为她相信儿子总有一天会回来。

[P024] 英文原文：

Then, one day a registered letter arrived, addressed to Jaruphong Thongsin at his home address. Inside was Jaruphong's identity card with a blood stain on it and a terse note, "Enclosed is an identity card." After crying for a time, Jinda realized that the sender's address was on the envelope and so returned to Bangkok again to track down the sender. He stopped at Brother's and they drove together to the sender's address. After looking for the place for three hours, they found it. A young mother who lived there did not know who the sender was. Jinda refused to give up. It occurred to him that he could trace registered mail through the post office. Fortunately, people there were very helpful, looking through dozens of log books until they found the name and address of the sender, Mr. Samran. Jinda and Brother tracked down Samran's place, but he wasn't there. They learned from neighbors that Samran had a son, Viroj, who was a student at TU and lived on the other side of Bangkok. Viroj must have sent the letter, Jinda concluded.

中文译文：

后来有一天，一封挂号信寄到了家里，收件人写着乍鲁蓬·通辛。信封里是乍鲁蓬的身份证，上面沾有血迹，还附着一张简短字条：‘内附一张身份证。’金达哭了一阵，随后意识到信封上有寄件地址，于是再次赴曼谷寻找寄信人。他先到哥哥家，两人一起开车找寄件地址。找了三个小时终于找到。一位住在那里的年轻母亲不知道寄件人是谁。金达不肯放弃，想到可以通过邮局追查挂号邮件。幸运的是，邮局工作人员十分热心，翻查几十本登记簿，终于找到寄件人善兰先生（Samran）的姓名和地址。金达和哥哥找到善兰家，却不见其人。邻居告诉他们，善兰有个儿子维罗（Viroj），是法政大学的学生，住在曼谷另一侧。金达于是判断，信必定是维罗寄的。

[P025] 英文原文：

Jinda and Brother found Viroj's house. The owner, a woman, invited them in. Viroj lived there, she explained, but had left town for a few days. Jinda recounted his story, and she confirmed that Viroj had collected several cards of his friends from the police station near TU and had mailed them. Many more remained in a box that she showed to Jinda. Jinda and Brother met with the station chief, who explained that many students had thrown away their identity cards when they escaped from TU that day. Jinda saw a box full of cards on display at the station for anybody who might know the owners to pick up. The next day, Jinda and Brother visited Viroj's house again, trying to find out what he knew about Jaruphong, but again he wasn't there. Jinda returned home.

中文译文：

金达和哥哥找到了维罗住的房子。女房东邀请他们进门。她解释说维罗确实住在那里，只是离开城里几天了。金达讲述了自己的经历，女房东证实，维罗从法政大学附近的警察局捡回几张朋友的身份证并寄了出去。还有很多身份证装在一个箱子里，她拿给金达看。金达与哥哥去见警察局长，后者解释说，那天许多学生从法政大学逃跑时扔掉了身份证。金达看见警察局摆着满满一箱卡片，供认识失主的人领取。次日，他和哥哥再次前往维罗住处，试图打听维罗对乍鲁蓬的了解，但维罗仍不在。金达只好回家。

[P026] 英文原文：

The memoir ends abruptly here, unfinished. It was kept in a box for many years, moved several times to avoid floods, until 1996 when it was published in a commemorative booklet dedicated to Jaruphong during the commemoration of the massacre.

中文译文：

回忆录在这里突然中断，没有写完。手稿被放在盒子里保存多年，其间为了躲避洪水还移动了几次，直到1996年屠杀纪念期间，才被收录进一本纪念乍鲁蓬的小册子并出版。

[P027] 英文原文：

Hope amid Confusion

中文译文：

混乱中的希望

[P028] 英文原文：

From journalists' interviews with Jinda and Lim in 1996 and later, I learned more about their lives during those years as they continued the search for their son. Whenever they heard that somebody had met Jaruphong, they would follow the rumors. "The two of us, Lim and I, rode motorcycles to six jungles, but we did not find him," Jinda once said.2 "I am so confused," Lim added. "Those who were at TU on that day said [Jaruphong] died. But people in this area said he is still alive. As long as we do not see his dead body, we have hope." About ten years after the massacre, they received a letter that contained a photo of Jaruphong being dragged along the soccer field that morning (such as figure 2). An anonymous sender wrote, "Dear Father, I was a friend of Jaruphong. I heard that you and the Mother are still searching for Jaruphong. . . . You don't have to search anymore because Jaruphong is gone. No Jaruphong anymore." Jinda told us that was when he began to believe it.3 But even after that, they followed up on any rumors that somebody had seen Jaruphong, despite their realization that he probably would never return. They refused to give up hope as long as there was no confirmation of his death and his body was not found.

从1996年及之后记者对金达和林的采访中，我进一步了解了他们继续寻找儿子的那些年。每当听说有人见过乍鲁蓬，他们就会追踪传闻。‘我们两个人，林和我，骑摩托车跑过六片丛林，却没有找到他。’金达有一次说。 林补充说：‘我真是困惑极了。当天在法政大学的人说［乍鲁蓬］死了，但这里的人又说他还活着。只要没看到他的遗体，我们就还有希望。’屠杀约十年后，他们收到一封信，里面有一张乍鲁蓬在那个早晨被拖过足球场的照片（例如图2）。匿名寄信人写道：‘亲爱的父亲，我是乍鲁蓬的朋友。听说您和母亲还在寻找乍鲁蓬……您不必再找了，因为乍鲁蓬已经不在了。再也没有乍鲁蓬了。’金达告诉我们，那时他才开始相信儿子死了。 即便如此，只要传来有人见过乍鲁蓬的消息，他们依然会跟进，尽管已意识到他大概永远不会回来。只要没有确认死亡、没有找到遗体，他们就不肯放弃希望。

[P029] 英文原文：

Their other children grew up under the cloud of their eldest brother’s death. The sister saw the photograph while at university. She was not sure that it was her brother and dared not look too carefully. She could not bear to tell her parents what she thought because she knew they still lived with hope.4 She believed that they also knew that Jaruphong was gone but chose to live in denial.5 One of the brothers knew about their father’s memoir long before it became public but he could not read it through.6

中文译文：

家里其他孩子在长兄死亡的阴影中长大。妹妹上大学时看到了那张照片，却不能确定是不是哥哥，也不敢仔细看。她不忍把自己的想法告诉父母，因为知道他们仍靠希望生活。　她相信父母也知道乍鲁蓬已不在人世，只是选择不承认。　一个弟弟很早就知道父亲写了回忆录，远在它公开之前，但他无法读完。

[P030] 英文原文：

What happened to Jaruphong Thongsin did not become clear until 2000, when his body was identified. There were only a few witnesses during the chaotic moments that morning. Early on it was said that, after making sure everybody had left the TU Student Union building, Jaruphong was the last person to leave the building, at about the time that the police arrived. Word spread fast even to the prison during the first week I was there that he had been killed. Given the severe restriction of information after the massacre, however, this could not be verified. Adding to the confusion was the fact that Jaruphong’s name was never among the dead or the injured or among the arrested. Moreover, because he was an executive member of the National Student Center of Thailand, his name appeared as one of the student leaders who remained at large. The photograph of his body being dragged along the soccer field with a piece of cloth around his neck was seen worldwide, but not in Thailand until many years later. A few people got it from abroad. The photograph, though, did not make it clear beyond doubt that the victim was Jaruphong.

直到2000年遗体身份得到确认，乍鲁蓬·通辛究竟遭遇了什么才逐渐清楚。那个早晨混乱时刻的见证者寥寥无几。早先传言说，乍鲁蓬确认所有人都离开法政大学学生会大楼之后，才作为最后一人离开，当时警方正好抵达。我被关进监狱的第一周，就有人迅速将他遇害的消息传到狱中。但屠杀后的信息受到严厉管制，传闻无法证实。更令人困惑的是，乍鲁蓬的名字始终不在死者、伤者或被捕者名单上。而且，因为他是全国学生中心的执行成员，他的名字又被列入仍然在逃的学生领袖。那张他被布条勒住脖子、遗体被拖过足球场的照片传遍世界，却直到多年后才在泰国出现。少数人从国外得到照片。然而，照片并不能毫无疑问地证明受害者就是乍鲁蓬。

Meanwhile, the misinformation that he had joined the communists kept his parents' hope alive. During those years, Jaruphong's friends did not reach out to Jinda and Lim. They were certain that he had died on that day, but they too were perplexed by the disappearance of his body and the absence of his name among the dead. I saw the photograph for the first time in 1978 shortly after my release from prison. I still recall the discussion among Jaruphong's close friends as to whether the victim in the photo was Jaruphong. We could not confirm it. We agreed only that the victim's clothes looked like his. If the victim was Jaruphong, we wondered whether he had been dragged or whether the abuse of his body had taken place after his death. In any case, we did not realize that his parents had not heard and had not been informed about his death. We did not know about their relentless search for their son. By the early 1980s, the former radicals had other concerns, from the crisis within the revolutionary movement, to how to survive and resume their normal lives in the society they had once despised. Jaruphong's death, although never forgotten, did not seem to be an urgent matter.

与此同时，他已加入共产党人的错误消息维系着父母的希望。这些年里，乍鲁蓬的朋友没有主动联系金达和林。他们确信乍鲁蓬当天遇害，却也对遗体失踪和死者名单没有他感到疑惑。1978年我出狱不久，第一次看见那张照片。至今还记得乍鲁蓬的密友们讨论照片中的人是否就是乍鲁蓬。我们无法确认，只能一致认为受害者的衣服看起来像他的。如果真是乍鲁蓬，我们还想知道遗体被拖拽或亵渎是否发生在死后。无论如何，我们当时并不知道他的父母尚未听说、也没有被正式告知儿子死亡，不知道他们一直不放弃地寻找。到20世纪80年代初，前激进分子面临其他问题，包括革命运动内部危机，以及如何在自己曾经蔑视的社会里生存并恢复正常生活。乍鲁蓬之死虽然从未被遗忘，却似乎不再是紧急的事情。

The commemoration in 1996 brought renewed attention to Jaruphong's death. As his friends planned activities to honor his sacrifice (described in chapter 6), it occurred to them that no one had visited his parents since that day. These friends of Jaruphong—including myself—were stunned to realize their negligence, which now struck them as heartless, unfathomable, irresponsible. That it was inexcusable is an understatement. With the assistance of Jaruphong's brother, a group of them made the trip to visit Jinda and Lim. After twenty years of hope and waiting for the return of their son, the truth they were afraid of was finally confirmed by their son's friends. Soon afterward, the story of Jinda and Lim appeared in the national media. Jaruphong became an icon of the victims of the October 6 massacre. His parents' unfaltering love and hope, and their anguish over twenty years, came to represent the suffering of the many parents and families of the victims.

1996年的纪念活动让乍鲁蓬之死再次受到关注。朋友们筹备纪念他牺牲的活动（见第6章）时，突然意识到自那天起没有任何人探望过他的父母。包括我在内的乍鲁蓬朋友们震惊地发现自己的疏忽，如今看来竟如此冷酷、不可理解、不负责任。说这种行为不可原谅，都还不够。得到乍鲁蓬弟弟的协助，其中一群朋友前去拜访金达与林。在二十年的希望和等待儿子归来之后，朋友们最终向他们确认了最害怕的真相。不久，金达与林的故事出现在全国媒体上。乍鲁蓬成为十月六日屠杀受害者的象征。他父母坚定不移的爱与希望，以及二十年的煎熬，成为众多受害者父母和家庭苦难的代表。

[P034] 英文原文：

My first question after reading Jinda’s memoir was why it stopped abruptly. The absence of an ending bothered me because I was anxious to know what happened after Jinda failed to find the sender of Jaruphong’s ID card and how that search unfolded. Moreover, to a friend who survived the same event that took Jaruphong’s life, his death and the desecration of his body were painful. The lack of closure to his parents’ search, though, made that pain unbearable. I was anxious to know how the search ended, if it did, and what happened to my friend’s father and mother during those years. Perhaps the absence of closure for them made the wound fresh for me as well. I could not be content with the simple assumption that Jinda had lost interest in keeping up the chronicle.

中文译文：

读完金达的回忆录后，我的第一个问题就是：它为什么突然结束？缺少结尾让我心绪不宁，因为我迫切想知道金达没能找到寄来乍鲁蓬身份证的人之后又发生了什么，寻找的过程如何展开。更何况，作为与乍鲁蓬经历同一事件却幸存下来的朋友，他的死和遗体遭亵渎已经令我痛苦。而父母的寻找没有结局，则使这种痛苦变得无法忍受。我急切想知道寻找怎样结束，如果确实结束了的话；我也想知道朋友的父母在那些年里经历了什么。也许正是他们无法得到一个结局，使我自己的伤口也一直鲜活。我无法简单地认为金达只是失去了继续记录的兴趣。

[P035] 英文原文：

I met Jinda at the commemoration in 1996 and asked him for permission to translate his memoir, which he granted orally. In fact, he seemed indifferent to my request. Then I asked him whether he wanted to write more about how the search ended. Suddenly he was silent. He stared tensely at me but did not say a word. I realized immediately that I had just asked the most horrid and inexcusable question I had ever asked anyone. To write the ending of the memoir would have given him unbearable pain. This may be why he did not finish. My curiosity made me wonder, though, whether this was an adequate explanation, given that Jinda continued to search relentlessly for years despite the pain.

中文译文：

1996年纪念活动期间，我遇见金达，请求翻译回忆录，得到他口头同意。事实上，他对这个请求似乎无动于衷。随后我问他，是否愿意再写一写寻找怎样结束。突然，他沉默了。他紧张地注视着我，一句话也不说。我立刻意识到，自己刚问出了人生中最可怕、最不可原谅的问题。写下回忆录的结尾，会带给他难以承受的痛苦。这或许就是他没有写完的原因。然而，好奇心仍让我怀疑：既然金达尽管痛苦却连续多年不懈寻找，这种解释是否已经足够？

[P036] 英文原文：

My second and related question after reading the memoir was an obvious one: where was Jaruphong’s body? Its absence probably led to the misunderstanding that he was still at large and fueled the rumors of his guerilla activities. Above all, it gave Jinda and Lim the hope that their son might return. Jinda asked friends of his son to find out what happened to his son’s body. How and why did it disappear, if it did? This mystery also bothered me so much because what happened to my friend and the pain of his parents were personal. I could not leave it unresolved.

中文译文：

读完回忆录后，我的第二个相关问题很明显：乍鲁蓬的遗体在哪里？遗体不见了，可能造成他仍在逃的误解，并助长了他参加游击活动的传闻。最重要的是，这给金达和林留下了儿子可能归来的希望。金达曾要求儿子的朋友查明遗体遭遇了什么。如果遗体确实失踪，是如何、为什么消失的？这个谜也令我极为困扰，因为朋友的遭遇和他父母的痛苦与我有切身关系。我不能让它一直悬而未决。

[P037] 英文原文：

In 2000, I found the materials about the October 6 trial (see chapter 2, note 94), and the autopsy reports of every corpse from TU were among them.7 Except for a few, each report was in a standard format. The first page contained the personal information about the victim: name, address, age, place and time of death, and so on. The second page was the detailed examination of the corpse: sizes and shapes of the wounds on the body, dress, and other materials found with the body, and the examiner’s remarks on the cause of death. The third page was a photo of each corpse. A few serial numbers appear on each page, such as the ones for the file, the specific case (body), and the page of each report.

中文译文：

2000年，我找到关于十月六日审判的资料（见第2章注94），其中包括法政大学所有死者的尸检报告。

除少数外，每份报告都有固定格式：第一页列出受害者个人信息，包括姓名、地址、年龄、死亡地点与时间等；第二页详细检查遗体，记载伤口尺寸与形状、衣着及随身物品、法医对死因的评语；第三页附有死者照片。每页都印有一些编号，例如档案编号、具体案件（遗体）编号和报告页码。

[P038] 英文原文：

Among the dead were six unidentified Thai males. From the photos, one of the six looked like Jaruphong. A piece of cloth was still around his neck, and his face was swollen and deformed. The descriptive details, however, did not match: a mustache, older than twenty-five years old. Another corpse description—body type and dress, including a TU belt—seemed closer to Jaruphong, including a piece of cloth around his neck. The photo of this body was missing, however. My assistant and I looked at the photo of the first individual more than a dozen times on separate visits to the archives. I could not be 100 percent certain, but I believed it showed Jaruphong's body. The explanation for the misleading description turned out to be simple: after careful examination over many years, we found that the pages and photos of three reports of unidentified Thai males were out of order. When we corrected the problem, the photo of Jaruphong's body and its description matched my longlost friend. More than twenty years later, his body had been found, even if only on paper.

中文译文：

死者中有六名身份不明的泰国男性。从照片看，其中一人像乍鲁蓬。他脖子上仍缠着布条，脸肿胀变形。但文字描述不符：有胡须，年龄超过二十五岁。另一个遗体描述，包括身形、衣着、法政大学皮带和脖子上的布条，更像乍鲁蓬，可这具遗体的照片却不见了。我与助手先后十多次到档案馆，反复察看第一个人的照片。虽然无法百分之百肯定，我相信那就是乍鲁蓬。后来发现误导性描述的原因十分简单：经过多年仔细检查，我们发现三份身份不明泰国男性的报告页与照片放错了顺序。纠正之后，乍鲁蓬遗体的照片与描述终于能和我失去多年的朋友对上。二十多年后，他的遗体终于被找到了，即使只是在纸面上。

[P039] 英文原文：

According to the postmortem report, Jaruphong died from a gunshot wound before his body was abused. It is highly likely that Jaruphong's body had been at the hospital from the morning of October 6, but no one came to identify him. He had discarded his ID card before rushing out of the building. Sadly, his body was battered so badly that it was not easy to recognize his face. Thus his body became one of the six unidentified Thai males in the official reports. To find out what had happened to the unidentified unclaimed corpses, I contacted the senior police officer who had signed off on the autopsy reports. He explained that after a certain period the police had sent all the unclaimed corpses, the "corpses without relatives" (sop mai mi yat), for communal cremation at Wat Don, a Buddhist temple in Bangkok designated for this purpose. That is, the unidentified bodies from the October 6 incident were simply dumped together, indiscriminately, with other corpses without relatives from other accidents and crimes, and disposed of.

中文译文：

根据尸检报告，乍鲁蓬先死于枪伤，遗体随后才遭到亵渎。他的遗体很可能从10月6日上午起就停放在医院，但无人前来辨认。他冲出建筑物前已丢掉身份证。可悲的是，遗体遭殴打得过于严重，面容已难以辨认，因此在官方记录中成为六名‘身份不明泰国男性’之一。为了查明这些无人认领的不明遗体后来怎样了，我联系了在尸检报告上签字的资深警官。他解释说，经过一段时间，警方将所有无人认领的遗体，即所谓‘没有亲属的尸体’（sop mai mi yat），送往曼谷专门负责此事的佛寺——瓦东寺（Wat Don）集体火葬。也就是说，十月六日事件中的不明遗体被与其他事故或犯罪中的无亲属遗体不加区分地堆在一起，最终被处理掉。

[P040] 英文原文：

These findings provoked more questions. Did Jinda ever see the body or the photo at the Police Hospital, where most bodies were kept, during his search for his son? Jinda did not mention such a visit in his memoir. If not, why not? Was it because the chaos at the time or another reason? If he did go there, why did he not claim Jaruphong? Did he not recognize his son?

中文译文：

这些发现又引出更多问题。金达寻找儿子时，是否曾在大多数遗体停放的警察医院看过遗体或照片？他没有在回忆录中提到这样的探访。如果没有去，为什么？是因为当时混乱，还是其他原因？如果去过，为什么没有认领乍鲁蓬？是没有认出自己的儿子吗？

沉默的记忆

[P042] 英文原文：

I met both Jinda and Lim in 2001 when they came to Bangkok for the commemoration on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the massacre. I requested a private conservation with them to relate all I knew about their son’s body. “I wish I could have found his remains,” I said at the end of my account. We wept together. Afterward, I asked Jinda whether he had gone to the Police Hospital or seen the photo of the unidentified Thai males from the incident. Suddenly, while weeping, Lim pointed her finger at Jinda and screamed, “I told you that was Luk Kia [Jaruphong’s nickname] ! I told you that was Luk Kia!” Jinda sobbed. His head was down, his body slumped.

中文译文：

2001年，屠杀二十五周年纪念活动期间，金达和林来到曼谷，我见到了他们。我请求单独与他们谈话，把我知道的关于儿子遗体的一切告诉他们。讲述完毕时，我说：‘多希望我能够找到他的遗骸。’我们一起流泪。随后我问金达，寻找期间有没有去警察医院，或者看过事件中身份不明泰国男性的照片。突然，林一边哭一边指着金达尖叫：‘我早告诉你，那就是小吉［Luk Kia，乍鲁蓬的小名］！我早告诉你那就是小吉！’金达啜泣着，低下头，整个人瘫坐在那里。

[P043] 英文原文：

Jinda had gone to Sirirat Hospital and to many police stations but not to the Police Hospital. Jinda and Brother went to Wat Don, but after all the bodies had been cremated. They saw the pictures of five corpses. For a moment Jinda must have thought one of them looked like his son, as he still could describe the photo— the long-sleeved shirt and pants that looked familiar to him. He even recalled that one tooth was missing from that body, which made him unsure whether the body was that of his son.8 But the bodies in the photos were bloated, very difficult to identify with certainty. Perhaps his mind refused to recognize the photo he saw. Perhaps. Perhaps.

中文译文：

金达去过诗里拉医院和许多警察局，却没有去警察医院。他和哥哥也去过瓦东寺，但当时所有遗体已经火化。他们看了五具尸体的照片。金达那时一定有一瞬间觉得其中一个像儿子，因为他至今还能描述照片：长袖衬衫和裤子，看起来十分熟悉。他甚至记得那具尸体缺了一颗牙，这使他不确定是否真是儿子。　　但照片里的遗体已经肿胀，很难确切辨认。也许他的内心拒绝承认眼前看见的照片。也许。也许。

[P044] 英文原文：

Lim, still sobbing, murmured, “I told you that was him. I told you.” Jinda probably had told Lim what he saw and what he thought, too. I said nothing more, and as both of them continued to sob, I quietly excused myself. I was shocked, realizing only then how cruel what I had just done to them was. Why did I have to know all the answers? Should I have asked them the final questions? How could I? To this day, my eyes moisten every time I recall that moment, which I will never forget. Nor would I ever forgive myself. Truth telling is cruel.

中文译文：

林仍在抽泣，喃喃地说：‘我早说过那就是他。我早说过。’金达大概曾把自己看到和想到的告诉林。我没有再说什么；他们仍在哭，我悄悄告辞。我震惊地意识到自己刚刚对他们做的事情有多么残忍。我为什么非得知道所有答案？我应当问他们最后那几个问题吗？我怎么能问？直到今天，每当回忆起那永生难忘的时刻，我都会热泪盈眶。我也永远不会原谅自己。说出真相是残忍的。

[P045] 英文原文：

After our 2001 meeting, I believed I knew why Jinda had never finished his memoir. He probably did not want to. For Jinda and Lim, as long as Jaruphong's body was missing or unidentified, their hopes remained alive. The rumors and confusing information, together with the absence of a body, ironically, gave them hope. With that hope, Jaruphong remained alive to them, and they, too, were alive. The abrupt termination of the memoir was not an end to the story. Rather, it was a suspension of time to prolong hope and, perhaps more important, to allow a life to remain frozen in time, what we usually call memory. Closure represents finality, which in this case meant the end of hope and the end of life. For there to be any chance that Jaruphong might return, the memory and the memoir, must not be completed.

2001年见面后，我相信自己知道金达为什么从未写完回忆录。他大概是不想写完。对金达和林来说，只要乍鲁蓬的遗体失踪或身份无法辨认，希望就仍然存在。讽刺的是，传言、混乱的信息以及没有遗体，共同给了他们希望。有了希望，乍鲁蓬对他们而言仍然活着，他们自己也还活着。回忆录的突然中断并不是故事的终结，而是时间的暂停，以延续希望；更重要的也许是，让一个生命停留在凝固的时间之中，也就是我们通常所说的记忆。结局意味着终局，在这里就意味着希望的终结、生命的终结。为了保留乍鲁蓬有朝一日可能归来的机会，记忆和回忆录都不能完成。

[P046] 英文原文：

We usually take for granted that a memoir is the recording of memory. What is left unrecorded is either not remembered or something the memoirist does not want to remember. In other words, we assume that when a memoir comes to an abrupt end, forgetting or the loss of memory begins. Thus an unfinished memoir is the memory that comes to an end without the ending. But is it? For Jinda, the moment when his memoir stopped, the frozen memory began. The silence at the suspension of his memoir is full of memory. It was a good memory, one filled with hope that kept everybody alive. The memoir was suspended to prevent it from ending because it was not supposed to end.

中文译文：

我们通常想当然地把回忆录看作记忆的记录。没有写下的东西，要么没有被记住，要么是回忆者不愿记住的。换言之，我们假定回忆录突然中断，意味着遗忘或记忆丧失开始了。因此，未完成的回忆录似乎就是没有结尾便终止的记忆。但真是如此吗？对于金达，回忆录停止的那一刻，凝固的记忆才开始。回忆录暂停时的沉默充满了记忆。这是一种好的记忆，充满希望，使每个人得以继续活下去。回忆录之所以暂停，是为了不让它结束，因为它本来就不应该结束。

[P047] 英文原文：

But this good silence of memory is fragile. A grain of truth can destroy it. And with a grain of truth goes parental hope. Truth broke the silence that helped freeze time and history and helped keep Jaruphong and his parents alive. The closure that we usually yearn for was a curse to this silence. In my search for truth about Jaruphong's body and for answers about the memoir, I put an end to this good silence. Tears replaced silence; truth is unbearable.

中文译文：

但这种记忆的‘善意沉默’十分脆弱。一点真相就足以摧毁它，连同父母的希望一道消逝。真相打破了那种帮助冻结时间和历史、使乍鲁蓬及其父母继续‘活着’的沉默。我们通常渴望的结局，对这种沉默却是一种诅咒。在寻找乍鲁蓬遗体的真相及回忆录问题的答案时，我结束了这种善意沉默。眼泪取代了沉默；真相令人无法承受。

[P048] 英文原文：

Jinda's search for his son was over. He probably came to terms with the loss even though the scar would never go away. He spoke at every commemoration since 1996 on behalf of the families that lost daughters and sons.9 Lim, on the other hand, continued to live with hope, or live in denial, depending on how one sees it. According to an interview in 2002, she had not yet come to terms with the truth that her son would not come home.10 She passed away in December 2002.

金达寻子的旅程结束了。尽管伤痕永远不会消失，他大概终于接受了失去儿子的现实。从1996年起，他在每次纪念活动上都代表那些失去儿女的家庭发言。　另一方面，林继续怀抱希望地生活，或者说生活在否认之中，取决于我们怎样看待。据2002年的一次采访，她还没有接受儿子不会回家的事实。

她于2002年12月去世。

[P049] 英文原文：

Jinda did not come to the commemoration in October 2015 because he was too frail to travel. He passed away in January 2016.

[P050] The Buddhist Virtuous Silence

中文译文：佛教的德性沉默

[P051] 英文原文：

At the commemoration in 1996, a group of Buddhist activists reinvented a ritual to form a bridge linking the participants with the atrocity and the dead in order to come to terms with the past. The ritual did not emphasize loss but focused instead on the virtue of idealism, the spirits of those who died, and on a reexamination of ourselves in the present, what we can and should do to carry on those virtues. Refocusing on the present—the Buddhist notion of living in the moment—is a Buddhist way of confronting the past. The main messages from the commemoration are about remembering the massacre and the need for truth and tolerance for different political views. The strong message of the ritual led by the Buddhist contingent was forgiveness and letting go of the past, nonattachment, and moving on. The activists urged all victims to forgive without mentioning who should be forgiven. The emphasis on forgiveness shifts the discourse from one of legal and social justice to establish what is right and wrong for the society, to one about individual moral.

1996年纪念活动期间，一群佛教活动人士重新设计了一套仪式，试图搭建桥梁，将参加者与暴行及死者联系起来，使人们能够面对过去。这套仪式并不强调失去，而是关注理想主义的美德、死者的精神，以及对当下自我的重新审视：我们能够并且应该做什么，才能延续那些美德。重新把焦点放在现在——佛教所谓活在当下——是以佛教方式面对过去。纪念活动的主要信息，是记住屠杀、追寻真相，以及容忍不同政治意见的必要性。但佛教团体主持的仪式传达的强烈信息是宽恕、放下过去、不执著并继续生活。活动人士敦促所有受害者宽恕，却没有说明应宽恕谁。对宽恕的强调，使话语从通过法律和社会正义确定整个社会何为是非，转移到个人道德的问题。

[P052] 英文原文：

I encountered a number of former radicals who were not interested in or who refused to participate in the commemoration because they felt that revisiting the tragedy did not contribute to healing either individuals or society. Memory and truth, including the one about the perpetrators, they argued, was not necessary for closure and moving forward. Forgiveness was. To me, their discourse sounded very Buddhist. Even though I encountered only a few individuals of this persuasion, they have inspired me to learn more about the Buddhist approach to the past atrocity. In Thailand, Buddhist thinking and values are ingrained in the life and mentality of ordinary people, so it must have influenced how even former radicals made sense of and coped with the inexplicable events that had overtaken them. Some victims drew mental strength from Buddhism for their resilience.

中文译文：

我遇见过几位前激进分子，他们对纪念活动没有兴趣，或拒绝参加，因为他们认为重新回顾悲剧既不能治愈个人，也无助于社会。按他们的说法，记忆与真相，包括加害者的真相，并不是获得结局和继续前行所必需的；宽恕才是。对我而言，他们的言论听起来非常佛教化。虽然我只遇到少数几位持此观点的人，他们却促使我进一步了解佛教如何面对过去的暴行。在泰国，佛教思想与价值观深植于普通人的生活与心态中，因此它必然影响了即使是前激进分子如何理解、应对降临到自己身上的不可解释事件。一些受害者从佛教中获得了保持韧性的精神力量。

[P053] 英文原文：

The assumed approach to an atrocity emphasizes the need for truth, advocates remembering, and demands retributive justice to reach closure; forgiveness and moving on follow. The process is the same for individuals and for society to establish the rule of law. The Buddhist approach is different from the conventional one in many ways. I introduce a memoir written by a Buddhist activist only a few weeks after he was released from prison in 1976 and an explication by a Buddhist scholar about how to understand the massacre and deal with past atrocity. Although these activists and scholars may be stronger in their devotion, more sophisticated in their thinking, and more intense in their contemplation of Buddhist ethics than ordinary Buddhists, their discourse should help us understand the mindset of many victims and their families. I do not, however, try to evaluate the success or failure of the Buddhist approach to past atrocity, let alone judge whether it is an improvement on the conventional one that calls for truth, memory, and retributive justice. Nor am I interested in the doctrinal verification of the authenticity of the activist discourse. I only want to examine the mental and intellectual resources that are influential for many people in dealing with the traumatic past in the context of Buddhist Thailand.

中文译文：

通常设想的应对暴行的方式，强调追寻真相，主张记忆，并要求报应性的司法正义以获得结局；随后才能宽恕并继续前行。个人和社会建立法治的过程被看作相同。然而，佛教方式在许多方面与常规方式不同。我将介绍一位佛教活动人士在1976年获释后仅几周写下的回忆录，以及一位佛教学者关于如何理解屠杀和应对过去暴行的阐释。虽然这些活动人士和学者可能比普通佛教徒更虔诚，思想更复杂，对佛教伦理的思考更深入，但他们的话语有助于我们理解许多受害者及其家人的心态。不过，我并不打算评价佛教方法应对过去暴行是成功还是失败，更不会判断它是否优于要求真相、记忆与报应性正义的常规方法。我也不关心从教义层面验证这些活动人士话语的正统性。我只想考察，在佛教文化深厚的泰国，人们应对创伤过去时依赖的、对许多人具有影响力的精神与思想资源。

[P054] 英文原文：

Above all, the Buddhist approach to past atrocity raises many questions when contrasted with the conventional one. How does the Buddhist approach address issues of justice, accountability, punishment, impunity, and history? Does the Buddhist approach hinder the legal-secular approach? What is the significance of forgiveness for the Buddhist view and how does it work? In what way are forgetting and remembering parts of the Buddhist approach for healing? Does it encourage forgetting? What are the implications of this Buddhist approach to social memories and the historical truth?

中文译文：

最重要的是，与常规方式相比，佛教应对过去暴行的方法引出许多问题。它如何处理正义、问责、惩罚、有罪不罚和历史？佛教方式是否阻碍法律与世俗方式？宽恕在佛教观念中有什么意义，如何发挥作用？遗忘与记忆如何成为佛教疗愈方式的一部分？它是否鼓励遗忘？这一佛教方式对社会记忆与历史真相意味着什么？

The Massacre as the Mara

中文译文：

把屠杀视为魔罗

[P056] 英文原文：

Deeply concerned by the apparent complicity of the sangha to Thanom’s return in 1976, the Buddhist clubs from five universities visited the abbot of the Bowornniwet temple, hoping to pressure the establishment to find a peaceful solution.11 A few days before the massacre, a number of them decided to hold a fast inside TU to put more pressure on the sangha. On the morning of October 6, the police arrested them along with other protesters. After their release from prison, a Buddhist activist from TU, under the pen-name Mo.tho. ko.189 (MTK189), recorded a memoir about what he went through. His memoir is strikingly different from those of the radical students. It is an introspective memoir of the battle with one’s self. The references are from its 1996 publication.12

中文译文：

1976年，五所大学的佛教社团深切担忧僧团（sangha）似乎参与了他侬回国，因此前往拜访博沃尼威寺的住持，希望向宗教建制施压，促使其寻找和平解决方案。　　屠杀发生前几天，其中一些成员决定在法政大学校内绝食，以进一步向僧团施压。10月6日上午，他们与其他示威者一起被警方逮捕。获释后，一位法政大学佛教活动人士以笔名 Mo.tho. ko.189（MTK189）写下自己的经历。他的回忆录与激进学生的作品明显不同。这是一部内省的、与自我斗争的回忆录。下文引用依据其1996年版本。

[P057] 英文原文：

The memoir opens with his concern about the deteriorating political situation, which was partially caused by the sangha. He elaborated on his decisions to join the strike against the exam on October 4 and the fast on the next day, especially his mental deliberations about the fast, which involved serious sacrifice and high risk. The author described in detail his preparations for fasting, especially the mental one. The fasting, though, lasted only one day before the massacre. He was afraid but calmed himself down by reading. On learning that the police had shot and tortured many students, he considered how he would feel and act in such a situation. “To confront death with strength is a moral act. I tried to face the idea of death with a peaceful mind, although I must admit that my mind was not very peaceful in that situation” (58). When the armed police showed up to arrest him and his group, “I tried to concentrate on my breathing to avoid any expression of anger . . . I even turned to smile at (a friend)” (61). Like most others, he was punched and kicked along the way to the bus and the prison.

回忆录一开始写到他对政治局势恶化的忧虑，而僧团对此负有部分责任。他详细解释自己为何参加10月4日抵制考试的罢课与次日的绝食，特别是绝食前的思想权衡，因为绝食意味着严重牺牲和高风险。作者细致描述了绝食前的准备，尤其是精神准备。然而，绝食仅持续一天，屠杀就发生了。他害怕，但通过阅读让自己镇静。得知警方枪击并折磨许多学生后，他思考如果自己处于那种情境会如何感受与行动。‘以坚强面对死亡是一种道德行为。我努力以平和心态面对死亡的想法，尽管必须承认，在那样的情境中我的心并不十分平静’（58页）。当武装警察出现要逮捕他及同伴时，‘我试图专注呼吸，避免表现出任何愤怒……我甚至转过身对［一位朋友］微笑’（61页）。和多数人一样，他在前往巴士和监狱的途中遭到拳脚殴打。

As I was beaten up, I tried to focus on the sacrifice of Jesus. . . . Thinking of this inspired me to absorb the pain quietly without swearing or showing hatred or vengefulness. I prayed for the people . . . who committed barbaric acts today. . . . I would sacrifice myself to take the retribution they may get. . . . May [heaven] not punish them because they are ignorant and unknowing about what they have done . . . At that moment, I sincerely forgave them. I may not be able to love them. But I understood them and forgave them. These thoughts preoccupied me, much more than anger or hatred.” (66–68)

[P059] 英文原文：

Unfortunately, at that moment, a police officer kicked him very hard in the head, then the ribs. He curled his body in severe pain. It was so unbearable that he almost exploded in anger. Just almost; he put the utmost effort into suppressing his anger, hatred, and vengefulness. In his cell, he grew frightened as he thought about what might happen next. He tried to control his thoughts and feelings, concentrating only on the here and now, not the past or the future, and not TU or home (76). That night he had a pleasant dream. In fact, he had good dreams during the three nights in prison (77). He intentionally avoided talking to his cellmates about what had happened or their future because such conversation would bring despair about possibly spending miserable years in prison, and the country plunging further into violence and destruction.

The power of Evil was so strong that I feared I might give in to it. (84) This promise was very important to my life. (85)

Fortunately, MTK189 did not face the ultimate challenge because he was released a few days later. In the final section of the memoir, as he looked back on his ordeal, he was surprised that despite the brutality he had experienced, he had no ill feeling toward the police. It was still incomprehensible to him how people could be hateful and cruel to one another to the extent that occurred on October 6. Then, toward the end of the memoir, his final thought:

[P062] 英文原文：

Both sides were victims of ignorance and delusion (104). . . . Both the victims and the perpetrators suffered. The former did so physically and mentally, some permanently. They became utterly vengeful, despairing, and depressed. The latter were consumed by their insatiable hunger for power, which would amass sins to themselves. . . . I wish to dedicate merit, to share loving-kindness and good will with both sides (119–120).

[P063] 英文原文：

MTK189’s deliberate introspection into his thinking and feeling, and his efforts to control them, remind me of the Buddhist story “Facing Mara” (The Evil One) that is commonly illustrated on temple murals in Thailand. On the final day of the Buddha’s meditation toward Enlightenment, Mara appeared in various forms—seductive temptress, scary ghost, a threatening army of beasts, and so on—to try to distract or derail the Buddha from his path to the goal. Had he been seduced or frightened by Mara, giving way to anger, hatred, or delusion, he would have failed. Mara is the ultimate challenge, testing the strength of his commitment to Buddhist awakening. “Facing Mara” is a genre, still common to the hagiography of innumerable Buddhist sages and revered monks. Their stories, too, must include the moments when they faced the test from Evil in one form or another at some point in their spiritual lives.13

中文译文：

MTK189有意识地反省自己的思想与感受，并努力控制它们，使我想到佛教故事‘降魔’（Facing Mara），即在泰国寺庙壁画中常见的‘面对魔罗’故事。佛陀走向觉悟的最后一天，魔罗（Mara）以各种形态出现——诱惑的女子、可怕的鬼魂、威胁性的兽群军队等等——企图使佛陀分心或偏离目标。倘若佛陀受到魔罗诱惑或恐吓，屈服于愤怒、仇恨或愚痴，便会失败。魔罗是终极考验，用来测试佛陀追求觉悟的坚定程度。‘降魔’是一种叙事类型，今天仍常见于无数佛教贤者与高僧的圣徒传记中。他们的故事也必须包含某个灵性阶段面对某种邪恶考验的时刻。

[P064] 英文原文：

For this Buddhist activist, the October 6 carnage was a kind of ultimate challenge by the Evil One to test his commitment to the Buddhist ahimsa dharma (the virtue of nonviolence). This does not mean that he turned his actual encounter with fright and possible death into a piece of fiction. Rather, the Buddhist literary and ideological convention provides him with a model for how to behave, think, and conceptualize his experience. In Buddhist mythology, the story of the Buddha’s confrontation with Mara is an allegory. Mara’s different forms symbolize the different mental states that are inimical to Buddhist awareness. The stories of great Buddhist sages are likewise metaphorical narratives of their mental battles. This activist memoir of October 6 was not metaphorical, however. It was a straightforward account of the author’s battle with his self framed by a Buddhist story and its entailing view and ideology.

对这位佛教活动人士来说，十月六日的血腥杀戮是魔罗的某种终极考验，测试他对佛教非伤害之法（ahimsa dharma，即非暴力美德）的坚持。这并不是说他把现实中面对恐惧和可能死亡的遭遇写成了小说，而是佛教文学与意识形态传统为他提供了一套行为、思考和理解经历的范式。在佛教神话里，佛陀与魔罗的对抗是寓言。魔罗的不同形态象征着妨碍佛教觉知的不同心理状态。伟大佛教贤者的故事同样以隐喻方式叙述精神斗争。但这位活动人士关于十月六日的回忆录并非隐喻，而是在佛教故事及其世界观和意识形态框架下，直接讲述作者与自我的斗争。

[The] brutality [that happened in the massacre] was a manifestation of the Evil that is always ready to dress up in any ideological or religious garb in order to fulfill its wish. Ultimately speaking, the October 6 event . . . was a struggle between Evil and Virtue. The battlefield was not at . . . [the actual places where the bloodshed occurred] but was in our minds. The October 6 incident ended with the defeat of Virtue. Virtue cannot obstruct or hinder Evil. Unprecedented in Thai history, Evil exercised its power of terror over millions of people. Despite that, it was able to escape. Since that day, many have kept asking for the perpetrators. Who gave the order to the officers to kill? Who committed the atrocious act . . .? It is true that those involved in the killing on that day should be punished according to law. Nevertheless, nobody pays attention to the "true perpetrator." As a result, it has escaped us. . . . [P067] 英文原文：

Twenty years after the massacre, a reputable scholar-monk, Phra Paisal Wisalo, delivered a sermon titled "Lesson from October 6: Evil, Death, and Victory" at the commemoration in 1996.14 His main point throughout was that the ultimate perpetrators were not the humans—the generals, police, paramilitary gangsters, and so on—who committed the crimes, but Evil or khwam chua rai (wickedness, evilness, vice).

屠杀二十年后，备受尊敬的学者僧人帕·派萨尔·维萨洛（Phra Paisal Wisalo）在1996年的纪念活动上发表题为《从十月六日汲取的教训：邪恶、死亡与胜利》的讲演。14 他贯穿全文的主要观点是，最终的施害者并非那些实施犯罪的人——将军、警察、准军事组织的暴徒等等——而是‘邪恶’，即khwam chua rai（恶行、邪恶、罪恶）。

[P068] 英文原文：

I have known Paisal since we met at a high school gathering of activists from different schools in 1972. He was an avid reader and potential scholar. In 1976, he was among the more committed Buddhist activist students at TU. He was active in several groups that advocated for non-Marxist political and social justice for the poor and the oppressed and was strongly committed to nonviolence. In early October 1976, he joined the fast and was arrested at TU. Under the Thanin government, he was among the first who dared to campaign for the release of the Bangkok 18. In 1983, he was ordained as a Buddhist monk and has remained to this day. Over the years, the avid reader became a prolific writer and translator. He has written and translated more than a hundred books on various subjects related to Buddhism. Today he is one of the most respected scholar-monks in the country, yet he remains active for social justice.

我从1972年在一次不同学校活动学生的聚会上与派萨尔相识起，就一直认识他。他热爱阅读，也具有成为学者的潜质。1976年，他是法政大学较为坚定的佛教学生社会活动者之一。他参与过几个倡导非马克思主义的政治与社会公正、关心穷人和受压迫者的团体，并坚定主张非暴力。1976年10月初，他参加了绝食抗议，并在法政大学被捕。在他宁政府执政期间，他是最早敢于为释放‘曼谷十八人’奔走的人之一。1983年，他出家成为佛教僧人，此后一直保持僧人身份。多年间，这位热爱阅读的人也成为著述丰富的作家和译者，已撰写并翻译一百多本涉及佛教不同主题的书籍。如今他是泰国最受尊敬的学者僧人之一，同时仍积极致力于社会公正。

[P069] 英文原文：

According to his sermon at the commemoration, “the Evil of the Oct 6 incident is not found in any particular side of the conflict” (128) but instead refers to the mental state—the hatred, anger and vengefulness. “Another human is not our enemy. The real enemy of ours and of every human being is the Evil . . . in our minds” (149–150). The Evil caused both sides to dehumanize one another, paving the way for inhuman acts on a perceived inhuman enemy, ironically mostly in the name of a noble cause or virtue, such as protecting the nation, religion, and monarchy, or in the pursuit of a utopian society without oppression or exploitation. Dehumanization misleads one into believing in one’s superiority and enables heinous acts that a person would normally not be able to do. “Everybody [every side] is part of the problem” (151) because we have all dehumanized one another, wished malice on each other.

中文译文：

根据他在纪念活动上的讲演，‘十月六日事件的邪恶并不存在于冲突的任何特定一方’（128），而是指一种心理状态——仇恨、愤怒与复仇之心。‘另一个人并不是我们的敌人。我们以及所有人类真正的敌人，是我们心中的邪恶……’（149—150）。邪恶使双方都将对方非人化，从而为对其认定的‘非人’敌人施加不人道行为铺平道路。讽刺的是，这种行为大多以崇高事业或美德之名进行，例如保卫国家、宗教和君主制，或追求一个没有压迫和剥削的乌托邦社会。非人化使人误以为自己高人一等，并得以做出平时不会实施的骇人行为。‘每个人［每一方］都是问题的一部分’（151），因为我们都曾将对方非人化，并对彼此怀有恶意。

[P070] 英文原文：

Even though one side only did so verbally, and the other did so by arms and killings, all helped fuel the flames of hatred, anger and vengeance . . . All of us were partly responsible [for the October 6 incident], and cannot avoid guilt . . . one way or another. (151–152)

中文译文：

‘尽管一方只是在言语上这样做，而另一方却使用武器并实施杀戮，但所有人都助长了仇恨、愤怒与复仇的烈焰……我们所有人都对［十月六日事件］负有部分责任，也都无法以这样或那样的方式逃避过错。’（151—152）

[P071] 英文原文：

Evil does not reside exclusively in wicked people who should be isolated from the rest of the society. All of us have Evil hiding within us that can show up if we are not careful and mindful. An event like the 1976 massacre could happen again and again if we do not admit that Evil hides in our minds and not try to get rid of it. Overcoming Evil must start with confronting it, then building up loving kindness to drive it from our minds. The most effective way to fight Evil is with forgiveness. “If we do not forgive those who caused the violence, how can we defeat Evil, which is the root of the October 6 event?” (155).

邪恶并不只存在于那些应当与社会其他成员隔离开的恶人身上。我们每个人内心都潜藏着邪恶；如果不保持谨慎与正念，它就可能显露出来。如果我们不承认邪恶藏在自己心中，也不努力将其去除，像1976年屠杀那样的事件就可能一再发生。战胜邪恶必须从直面邪恶开始，然后培养慈爱之心，将其从心中驱逐。对抗邪恶最有效的方式是宽恕。‘如果我们不宽恕那些造成暴力的人，又怎能战胜作为十月六日事件根源的邪恶？’（155）

[P072] 英文原文：

Evil wants us to lose our need for virtue. . . . It took away lives in the October 6 event so brutally in order to subdue the rest of us, then induce us to surrender idealism and faith in Dhamma by instigating anger, hatred and vengeance [in us]. If we lose our idealism and Virtue, it means we let [Evil] beat us. If we are full of vengeance, it means we let Evil possess us. We cannot bring back those lives that were lost. But we can turn the losses of that day into victory by empowering Virtue to defeat Evil. Don’t let Evil destroy anybody anymore.” (160–161)

中文译文：

‘邪恶想要让我们失去对美德的追求……它在十月六日事件中如此残酷地夺走生命，是为了制服我们其余的人，继而通过激起［我们内心的］愤怒、仇恨和复仇之心，诱使我们放弃理想主义以及对佛法的信念。如果我们失去了理想和美德，就意味着我们让［邪恶］打败了自己。如果我们满怀复仇之心，就意味着我们让邪恶占据了自己。我们无法让逝去的生命回来，但可以通过增强美德的力量、使其战胜邪恶，将那一天的损失转化为胜利。不要再让邪恶毁掉任何人。’（160—161）

[P073] 英文原文：

According to this thinking, bringing “them” to justice is secondary to fighting Evil in all of us. Nonetheless, the social conditions that nurture Evil are also to blame, such as the media and social injustice. Ordinary people in normal situations cannot commit such heinous acts as those on October 6. When I met with Paisal in 2007, I asked him about the social conditions of Evil, the subject that he touched on briefly in his sermon.15 Paisal agrees that “machines of violence” (his words) are found in politics and in everyday life that potentially can arouse and amplify Evil to a dangerous level. We must try to eradicate those social machines of violence, too. The Buddhist dharma applies as much to social norms as it does to individuals. Nevertheless, he insisted, we must learn how to control the Evil in our minds in normal situations when it is not so dangerous. Paisal made it clear that normal legal justice is necessary to maintain the social fabric. Wrongdoers should be punished. But we do not support legal punishment out of anger or vengeance. Doing so would let Evil escape again.

中文译文：

按照这种思路，将‘他们’绳之以法的重要性便次于对抗我们每个人心中的邪恶。不过，孕育邪恶的社会条件同样应受谴责，例如媒体与社会不公。普通人在正常情境下不可能犯下十月六日那样骇人的暴行。2007年我与派萨尔见面时，问及他在讲演中简要涉及的、滋生邪恶的社会条件。15 派萨尔同意，政治与日常生活中存在着‘暴力机器’（他的原话），它们有可能激发并放大邪恶，直至危险程度。我们也必须努力铲除这些社会中的暴力机器。佛教教义既适用于个人，也适用于社会规范。尽管如此，他坚持认为，我们必须在邪恶尚未如此危险的日常情境中学会控制心中的邪恶。派萨尔明确表示，正常的法律正义对于维系社会结构不可或缺，违法者应受到惩罚。但我们不应出于愤怒或报复而支持法律惩罚；那样只会让邪恶再次逃脱。

[P074] 英文原文：

Even though ordinary Buddhists may not be as sophisticated as Paisal, Buddhist thinking is part of their intellectual environment. In general, people are more familiar with the concept of legal justice—a crime needs to be accounted for, the right and wrong clearly stated. The advocacy for truth and legal justice puts emphasis on the blame and punishment of someone, in which case it could become the basis for revenge—and the perpetuation of Evil. In the Buddhist approach, coming to terms with the past starts and ends in oneself. In this thinking, the primary goal of the commemoration must be reconciliation, above and ahead of justice. My conversation with Paisal, then, focused on the implications of the Buddhist approach to past atrocity. First, does the emphasis on forgiveness indirectly undermine legal justice and vice versa? Is it an alternative solution to legal justice or a complementary one? Second, if the pursuit of the perpetrators and legal justice are unimportant, is knowing the truth about the past necessary? Do truth, history, and memory matter? What is the value of remembering, individually and collectively, and for a society over the long term?

中文译文：

尽管普通佛教徒未必像派萨尔那样在思想上如此精深，佛教思维却是他们知识环境的一部分。一般来说，人们更熟悉法律正义的观念——犯罪必须受到追究，是非必须清楚辨明。倡导真相与法律正义强调对某人的归责与惩罚，而这可能成为复仇的基础，进而使邪恶延续。在佛教的路径中，与过去和解始于自己，也终于自己。按照这种思路，纪念活动的首要目标必然是和解，而且应当先于正义。因此，我与派萨尔的交谈集中在佛教处理过去暴行的方式所蕴含的意义。第一，强调宽恕是否会间接损害法律正义，反之亦然？它是法律正义的替代方案，还是补充？第二，如果追究施害者和寻求法律正义并不重要，那么了解过去的真相还有必要吗？真相、历史和记忆是否重要？无论对个人、集体，还是对一个社会的长远发展，记忆有什么价值？

[P075] 英文原文：

Legal justice may help contain Evil, but it may not be helpful in eradicating it. On the contrary, in Paisal's view, if the pursuit of the retributive justice originated from the desire for vengeance, such pursuit would exacerbate hatred and vengefulness, individually and socially. Legal justice, in theory at least, however, is part of the necessary mechanism to create the social conditions that prevent violence. The pursuit of justice for this purpose and without personal vengeance, in his view, is not contradictory to the Buddhist effort to eradicate Evil. He repeatedly distinguished the necessary methods and outcomes for individual and society which may not be the same but are not necessarily contradictory. According to Paisal, the perpetrators should be brought to justice according to the law. Retributive justice, nonetheless, does not tackle the root cause of Evil, and hence is not the top priority for a Buddhist monk. Only forgiveness does.

中文译文：

法律正义可能有助于遏制邪恶，却未必有助于铲除它。相反，在派萨尔看来，如果追求报应性正义源自复仇欲望，这种追求就会加剧个人和社会的仇恨与报复心理。不过，至少在理论上，法律正义是建立防止暴力的社会条件所必需的机制之一。在他看来，如果为此目的而寻求正义，同时不怀有个人复仇之心，那么这并不与佛教铲除邪恶的努力相矛盾。他反复区分个人与社会所需的方法和结果：两者可能不同，却不必然矛盾。派萨尔认为，施害者应依法接受审判。然而，报应性正义无法处理邪恶的根源，因此并非一位佛教僧人的首要任务；只有宽恕才能做到这一点。

[P076] 英文原文：

Forgiveness does not require truth or knowledge of who and what act to forgive, Paisal confirmed. He went even further, repeating from his sermon on the October 6 massacre that both sides were guilty in different ways and extents. Forgiveness was unilateral regardless of the other's guilt. If such is the case, I asked, does forgiveness blur the line between the right and wrong and ultimately undermine legal justice? Probably so, he replied, before explaining that forgiveness and justice do not serve the same purposes. Forgiveness aims at our minds. It does not help set the social precedents or moral standards that a society also needs. It may or may not lead to reconciliation either because it is not a social act.

中文译文：

派萨尔确认，宽恕不需要真相，也不需要知道要宽恕的是谁、什么行为。他甚至更进一步，重申自己在十月六日屠杀讲演中的观点：双方都以不同方式、不同程度负有过错。宽恕是单方面的，与对方有何罪责无关。既然如此，我问他，宽恕是否会模糊是非界线，最终损害法律正义？‘也许会’，他回答，随后解释说，宽恕与正义服务于不同目的。宽恕针对的是我们的内心。它无助于树立社会同样需要的先例或道德标准。它也可能促进和解，也可能不会，因为宽恕并不是一种社会行为。

[P077] 英文原文：

Regarding the necessity of knowing the truth, Paisal explained how the most important truth in the Buddhist view is the realization of the Evil of certain acts or events rather than the legal or historical truth about who did what. The success in achieving one kind of truth may not lead to success in achieving the other. These different kinds of truth are not necessarily incompatible and can be complementary. The more important question, he suggested, is how we should deal with these different kinds of truth. In the Buddhist view, equanimity is necessary for legal and historical truth about the massacre. The search for historical truth should come without surrendering to anger, hatred, or vengeance. "Truth with empathy but without vengefulness," he said. Paisal himself wanted to know the truth of who did what, however. He believed that society could learn valuable lessons if people knew how to handle the truth. He argued that some former radicals might have avoided the truth-telling of the commemoration because the trauma was still fresh and painful to them (rather than concerned with the rise of the Evil in their minds). If the wound dried and became a scar, they should be able to take in the truth with equanimity. The only way to turn a fresh wound into a scar is with forgiveness. Despite their attempts to deal with their painful past in a Buddhist way, doing so may have only been a temporary measure, like a band aid, leaving them with fresh wounds even decades after the massacre. I argued that the ability to share the pain of victims is good for people and has inspired them to search for truth. Paisal understood but reiterated that he does not advocate sharing pain. We should be able to pursue the legal truth for justice and the historical truth for its lessons without feeding Evil. For an individual, he insisted, the legal and historical truth are not important because they do not help eradicate Evil. For a society, they are important because they help create a better society and reduce the social conditions that nurture Evil.

谈到了解真相的必要性，派萨尔解释说，从佛教的角度看，最重要的真相，是认识某些行为或事件中的邪恶，而不是关于谁做了什么的法律真相或历史真相。获得一种真相，并不必然使另一种真相也得到实现。这几种真相未必互不相容，也可以相互补充。他提出，更重要的问题是我们应当如何面对不同类型的真相。在佛教看来，面对屠杀的法律和历史真相，必须保持平等心。寻求历史真相不应屈从于愤怒、仇恨或复仇之心。他说，‘有同理心但不怀复仇之意的真相’。不过，派萨尔自己也希望知道是谁做了什么。他相信，如果人们懂得如何面对真相，社会就能从中汲取宝贵的教训。他认为，一些昔日激进活动者可能避免在纪念活动中诉说真相，是因为创伤对他们而言仍然鲜活而痛苦，而不是担心心中的邪恶兴起。如果伤口干燥、结成伤疤，他们就应该能够以平等心接受真相。使新鲜伤口变成伤疤的唯一办法是宽恕。尽管他们试图以佛教方式面对痛苦的过去，这种做法可能只是临时措施，如同创可贴，使他们在屠杀数十年后仍留着尚未愈合的伤口。我提出，能够分担受害者的痛苦对人们是好事，也激励了他们追寻真相。派萨尔理解这一点，但重申自己不主张分担痛苦。我们应当能够追求法律真相以实现正义，追求历史真相以吸取教训，而不去滋养邪恶。他坚持认为，对个人而言，法律与历史真相并不重要，因为它们无助于铲除邪恶；对社会而言，它们却是重要的，因为它们有助于建设更好的社会，减少孕育邪恶的社会条件。

[P078] 英文原文：

Another point, Paisal reminded me, is that the deeper the trauma, the more desirable reconciliation becomes. Legal justice is good but not a necessary condition for reconciliation and forgiveness. Nor is historical truth. In response, I argued that, in Thailand, reconciliation was often deployed in social and political discourse as a strategy to cover up past atrocity, to avoid legal justice, and to forget. Paisal agreed. In Thailand, the discourse of reconciliation usually receives strong public support because most Thais do not view justice and historical truth as preconditions for reconciliation.

派萨尔还提醒我，创伤越深，人们就越渴望和解。法律正义固然是好事，但并非和解与宽恕的必要条件；历史真相也不是。对此，我提出，在泰国的社会与政治话语中，‘和解’常被当作掩盖过去暴行、回避法律正义并促成遗忘的一种策略。派萨尔表示同意。在泰国，和解话语通常获得强大的公众支持，因为大多数泰国人并不把正义和历史真相视为和解的先决条件。

[P079] Virtuous Silence?

中文译文：有德性的沉默?

[P080] 英文原文：

For the former-radicals-turned-Buddhists, voicing trauma is not their way of dealing with the past. Silence is to keep either Evil at bay or their pain in check. This is a voluntary silence, not a suppressive one, for a good reason, their way of coming to terms with the past and moving on. My encounter with those who take this Buddhist approach to the traumatic past seriously at first gave me the impression that they simply wanted to avoid trouble in their lives. By the end of my inquiry, though, I truly respected their thinking. My search, however, led me to many more questions. Is the Buddhist approach good only under authoritarian conditions? Had the legal system been just and fair, if the political system worked well without suppression or persecution of those seeking justice, and if Thai people were free from their concern for the monarchy and the sangha, would people opt for legal justice over Buddhist silence? I can predict Paisal's answer: the two choices are not incompatible. But I am more interested in what ordinary people like those former radical activists would choose to do. The reality is that the rule of law in many countries, especially authoritarian ones, cannot be depended on for a just closure. In such conditions, will the normative approach to past atrocity—truth, legal justice, remembrance, and reconciliation—be available and effective? If not, what other options might people could turn to?

中文译文：

对于从昔日激进活动者转变而来的佛教徒，诉说创伤不是他们处理过去的方式。沉默是为了抑制邪恶，或者控制自己的痛苦。这是一种自愿的沉默，而非受压制的沉默，出于他们认为正当的理由，是他们与过去达成和解、继续生活的方式。起初，当我接触那些认真以佛教方式面对创伤历史的人时，我觉得他们只是想避免生活中的麻烦。然而，调查结束时，我确实尊重他们的思考。不过，这一探索又带给我更多问题。佛教路径是否只在威权条件下才有效？如果法律制度公正公平，政治制度运作良好，不会压制或迫害寻求正义的人，泰国人也无须顾虑君主制与僧团，那么人们会不会选择法律正义，而非佛教式沉默？我能预见派萨尔的回答：两种选择并不矛盾。但我更想知道，普通人，例如那些昔日激进活动者，会如何选择。现实是，在许多国家，尤其是威权国家，人们无法依靠法治得到公正的了结。在这样的条件下，处理过去暴行的规范路径——真相、法律正义、纪念与和解——是否可行并有效？如果不行，人们还有什么其他选择？

[P081] 英文原文：

Finally, Paisal asked me whether legal justice and historical truth can really prevent future atrocities. I did not answer because I know that they cannot. The different approaches to past atrocity are various ways of moving on. If so, is it possible that the Buddhist approach is a legitimate and possibly effective path to move on under certain conditions? Is moving on without truth or justice but with good silence sufficient and satisfactory? It does not promise never again because it is not easy to beat the Evil. However, the human rights ideal of legal justice cannot make that promise either.

中文译文：

最后，派萨尔问我：法律正义与历史真相真的能够防止未来的暴行吗？我没有回答，因为我知道它们做不到。面对过去暴行的不同路径，都是继续向前生活的不同方式。既然如此，在某些条件下，佛教路径是否也可能是一条正当且有效的前进道路？不拥有真相或正义，却通过‘善的沉默’继续生活，是否已经足够、令人满意？它无法承诺‘绝不再发生’，因为战胜邪恶并不容易；然而，以法律正义为核心的人权理想同样无法作出这样的保证。

[P082] 英文原文：

So far I have engaged with the arguably virtuous silence among the Buddhist activists. Let us not forget the Buddhist establishment, the national Buddhist order or the Thai sangha. Throughout modern history, the Thai sangha has been an integral component of the establishment. Unlike the Theravada sangha in neighboring countries, such as in Burma, that turned rebellious from time to time, the Thai sangha has generally been supportive of the state, the military, and the monarchy. Most of the time, they do so by their inaction to injustice and to the state's mischief, and by their indifference to people's plight, all in the name of being nonpolitical. Their silence typically signals complicity to the state.

中文译文：

到目前为止，我讨论的是佛教活动者中或可称为具有德性的沉默。但我们不能忘记佛教建制，即全国性的佛教僧团（泰国僧伽，sangha）。在整个现代历史中，泰国僧团一直是统治建制不可分割的一部分。与缅甸等邻国时而反抗的上座部佛教僧团不同，泰国僧团总体上支持国家、军队和君主制。多数时候，他们以‘不涉政治’的名义，对不公正与国家的不当行为袖手旁观，对人民的苦难漠不关心，以这种不作为表达支持。他们的沉默通常意味着对国家的共谋。

[P083] 英文原文：

The October 6 massacre therefore was probably a dark day for them as well. The roles of prominent monks in the pretext of the massacre were controversial, even repulsive, to some victims. The sangha's absolute silence about the atrocity ever since that day, however, is surprising to no one. Its silence probably speaks volumes, though it was not clear what it says. In the decades after the massacre, even as sympathy for the victims increased, people remained very cautious and reluctant to make any serious allegation against the Buddhist establishment. Both the sangha's silence and the public's silence are definitely not virtuous. This is a subject I have not been able to investigate for this book.

中文译文：

因此，十月六日屠杀对他们来说或许也是黑暗的一天。一些著名僧人在屠杀借口的形成过程中所扮演的角色引发争议，甚至令一些受害者反感。然而，自那天起，僧团对暴行保持彻底沉默，并不令任何人意外。这种沉默或许意味深长，虽然它究竟表达了什么并不清楚。屠杀后数十年，即使公众对受害者的同情有所增加，人们仍十分谨慎，不愿严肃指控佛教建制。无论是僧团的沉默还是公众的沉默，都绝非具有德性的沉默。这是我在本书中尚未能够调查的主题。

[P084] Mute Soliloquy

中文译文：无声的独白

[P085] 英文原文：

For almost a year since the day he escaped lynching by a right-wing mob, Dr. Puey Ungphakorn worked tirelessly to tell the world about the massacre by the murderous regime in Thailand (see figure 4). He traveled across the globe delivering speeches, participating in meetings, and testifying to governments and parliaments, including a US congressional committee. He wrote extensively about the massacre when others in Thailand could not. Born in 1916 to a Chinese family, he had a remarkable career as an outstanding economist, an incorruptible bureaucrat who was trusted to be the governor of the Bank of Thailand for more than a decade, a reputable scholar and educator, and a lifelong social democrat in an authoritarian land.16 In September 1977, after a year of travel and hard work, Puey suffered a severe stroke that left him unable to speak and barely able to write. He was thus among the victims of the massacre as well. Given that his mind still functioned well, I wondered what thoughts he had in his enforced silence.

中文译文：

自从险些被右翼暴民私刑杀害而逃脱之后，近一年来，浦·翁帕功博士（Dr. Puey Ungphakorn）不知疲倦地向世界讲述泰国杀戮政权造成的屠杀（见图4）。他走遍世界各地，发表演讲、参加会议，并向各国政府和议会作证，包括美国国会一个委员会。他大量撰写有关屠杀的文章，而当时泰国国内其他人无法这样做。1916年，他出生在一个华人家庭，事业生涯卓越：既是杰出的经济学家，也是廉洁奉公、受信任并担任泰国银行行长十余年的官员，还是享有盛誉的学者与教育者，以及一个威权国家中终身坚持社会民主主义的人。16 1977年9月，在一年的奔波和艰苦工作后，浦发生严重中风，从此无法说话，几乎也无法写字。因此，他也是这场屠杀的受害者之一。既然他的思维仍很清楚，我不禁想知道，在这种被迫的沉默中，他心里想着什么。

[P086] 英文原文：

In October 1978, a month after the amnesty of the Bangkok 18, TU proposed to confer an honorary doctorate on Puey. Unexpectedly, he declined the honor. His reasons had nothing to do with TU or his feelings toward it. His son explained three reasons on his behalf. First, the October 6 massacre that had affected him directly remained murky, uninvestigated, and unresolved. Many students remained, at that time, in the jungle. Second, academic freedom within Thai universities remained limited. Third, Thailand remained undemocratic.17 At the very least, we know that he did not at all agree with the government’s attempts to silence the discourse about the massacre in the name of national reconciliation. He still demanded accountability for the incident. His second two reasons were radical rebukes at that time. Puey’s silent voice of reason was loud and clear.

中文译文：

1978年10月，在‘曼谷十八人’获大赦一个月后，法政大学提议授予浦荣誉博士学位。出人意料的是，他拒绝了这一荣誉。原因与法政大学本身或他对学校的感情无关。他的儿子代为解释了三个理由。第一，直接影响到他的十月六日屠杀仍然事实不明、未经调查、没有解决；当时许多学生仍在丛林里。第二，泰国大学的学术自由依然有限。第三，泰国仍不是民主国家。17 至少我们知道，他完全不赞同政府以民族和解之名压制有关屠杀的讨论。他依然要求追究此事责任。后两个理由在当时是激进的批评。浦那沉默的理性之声清晰而响亮。

[P087] 英文原文：

Was Puey’s silence in the final twenty-two years of his life a testament of the continuing absence of justice for the October 6 tragedy that he had fought for up to the last day he could speak? Was Puey’s life in silence a vocal testament of Thailand’s darker side because people with integrity, honesty, and the courage to speak the truth have suffered consequences? To me, it was.18 His physical silence was a mute soliloquy on the massacre, in the apt words of Pramoedya Ananta Toer.

中文译文：

浦在生命最后二十二年里的沉默，是否见证了十月六日悲剧的正义始终缺席，而他一直为此奋斗到自己能够开口的最后一天？一个具有操守、诚实并勇于说出真相的人因而蒙受后果，浦在沉默中的生活是否以有声的方式见证了泰国更黑暗的一面？对我而言，答案是肯定的。18 借用普拉姆迪亚·阿南达·杜尔（Pramoedya Ananta Toer）贴切的说法，他身体上的沉默，是一段关于屠杀的‘无声独白’。

[P088] 英文原文：

Unfortunately, Puey has been idolized and his ideas including his views of the massacre accommodated posthumously without taking his silent protest seriously. In April 1987, Puey returned to Thailand for the first time since 1976. Thousands of his colleagues, students, and the public welcomed him warmly at every place he went during the month-long visit. He returned briefly three more times in 1993, 1995, and 1997. But he refused to stay in Thailand. We can only speculate about why he chose to stay away from the country he loved, even though the political situation, generally speaking, had improved by that time and he would definitely not have faced the same ugliness as he had before. By the 1990s, Puey was perhaps one of Thailand’s most respected elders. He certainly enjoyed meeting old friends and students and visiting those places that were meaningful to his life. Perhaps he returned to mingle with people rather than to revisit the country. Perhaps the October 6 massacre had forever taken away his sense of belonging to Thailand. Physical injury is hard but the severance of belonging is harder. Puey’s situation was heartbreaking. Puey passed away in England in 1999.19 Even posthumously, he helped make the October 6 monument complete.

中文译文：

不幸的是，浦被塑造成偶像；在他去世后，人们也吸收、调和了他的思想，包括他对屠杀的看法，却没有认真对待他沉默的抗议。1987年4月，浦自1976年以来第一次返回泰国。在长达一个月的访问中，无论走到哪里，都有数以千计的同事、学生与公众热情欢迎他。此后他又于1993、1995和1997年短暂回国三次，但始终拒绝定居泰国。我们只能猜测，为什么他选择远离自己热爱的国家，尽管那时一般而言政治局势已经改善，他肯定也不会再面临昔日那般丑恶的对待。到了1990年代，浦或许已是泰国最受尊敬的长者之一。他无疑很享受与老友和学生见面，走访那些对自己生命具有意义的地方。或许他回来是为了与人相聚，而非重新亲近这个国家。或许十月六日屠杀已经永远夺走了他对泰国的归属感。身体伤害难以承受，归属感的断裂则更为痛苦。浦的处境令人心碎。他于1999年在英格兰去世。19 即使在身后，他仍促成十月六日纪念碑的完成。

[P089] 英文原文：

Jinda’s silence voiced the deep love and painful hope of parents. Paisal’s Buddhist silence was one of an admirable battle. These, plus Puey’s silence, are the mute soliloquies that we must not overlook. Decades after the incident, for example, a common subject of conversation among the former radicals was how to tell or whether to tell their children about the past. This question has no single or simple answer. Most chose to talk to their children when they were ready. Certainly other forms of good silence exist that this chapter has not discussed.

中文译文：

金达的沉默传达了父母深沉的爱和痛苦的希望。派萨尔的佛教式沉默是一场值得敬佩的抗争。它们加上浦的沉默，都是我们不能忽视的‘无声独白’。例如，事件过去数十年后，昔日激进活动者聊天时一个共同的话题是，如何向孩子讲述过去，或者究竟要不要讲。这个问题没有单一而简单的答案。大多数人选择等孩子准备好了再谈。当然，还有其他形式的‘善的沉默’，是本章尚未讨论的。
